In This Issue

Was David Kibble Convicted Of An Assault That Never Happened?

Does Prosecution’s Timeline Exclude Mickey Davis As A Murderer?

Ken Marsh Files $50 Million Claim For 21 Yrs Wrongful Imprisonment!

British Court Gives OK To Charge Exonerated People Room & Board!

MI Wrongful Conviction Report Downplays Wrongful Convictions!

Crime Lab Tech Behind Two Wrongful Convictions Sues Two Papers!

Federal Prosecutor Investigated For Possibly Framing 35 People!

Issue 28
Spring 2005
Table of Contents

Clara Boggs Steps Down From Justice:Denied.................................................................3
Michael and Becky Pardue’s Message of Appreciation to Clara Boggs..................3
Judge Mary Ann Ottinger Has Earned Removal From Office.................................3
Did Columbus Cops Shoot And Jail The Wrong Man? - The David Kibble Story......3
Report Downplays Wrongful Convictions in U.S.........................................................4
In Memory of Fred Korematsu – 1919-2005...............................................................5
Prosecution’s Timeline Makes Crime Impossible - The Mickey Davis Story............5
Crime Lab Technician Whose Testimony Contributed To Murder Conviction Of Two Innocent Men Sues For Libel..............................................................7
Bar-Hopping Alibi Against Murder Charge - The Richard Stallings Story.............8
48 Years After Wrongful Conviction - Eddie Mayes’ Sentence Commuted.............9
Marlinga Bribery Prosecution Update.................................................................10
Out Of The Fire - The Jennifer Hall Story...............................................................10
Federal Prosecutor Resigns Under Heat Of Criminal Investigation For Possible Frame-up Of 35 People..............................................................11
Judge Charged With Continuing To Conceal Defendants’ Rights.............................11
John Spirko Update....................................................................................................12
Justice For All Act Of 2004.....................................................................................12
Convictions Tossed For Talking Suggestively On Telephone....................................13
Wrongful Conviction Compensated By Mish-Mash Of State And Federal Laws.......14
Ellen Reasonover Awarded $7.5 Million Compensation For 16 Years Wrongful Imprisonment.......................................................14
Wilton Dodge Sues For 22 Years Wrongful Imprisonment........................................14
Compensation Awarded To The Wrongly Convicted In 2003 & 2004.....................15
Ken Marsh’s $50 Million Claim Rejected...............................................................15
Fabricated Prosecution Expert Testimony And Evidence Nets Michael Green $2.6 million for 13 Yrs Wrongful Imprisonment..........................16
Roberto Miranda Receives $5 Million For Wrongly Spending 14 Years On NV’s Death Row...............................................................16
Chart Of State And Federal Compensation For The Exonerated.........................17
Emory Law Student Helps Free Georgia Man Imprisoned 18 Yrs.........................17
Clarence Harrison Awarded $1 Million Compensation.............................................18
Clarence Harrison Exonerated Of Rape, Kidnapping And Robbery After 18 Years Imprisonment..........................................................18
Insanity Grips The British High Court – OK Given To Charge Exonerated People ‘Room and Board’..........................................................19
Anthony Marino Update.........................................................................................19
Michael Pardue’s For Compensation After 28 Years of Wrongful Imprisonment.....20
Iva Toguri Is Innocent! - Iva Toguri was not ‘Tokyo Rose’ and she was wrongly convicted of treason.................................................................22
Article Submission Guidelines..............................................................................26

Message From Clara Boggs

To all my friends who read Justice:Denied:

As of this issue, I have stepped down as Justice:Denied’s co-publisher and editor-in-chief. I have also resigned the presidency of The Justice Institute. Hans Sherrer is now Justice:Denied’s publisher and The Justice Institute’s president. I believe that Hans is a good choice because he cares about the magazine and he cares about justice.

I appreciate your support of Justice:Denied and The Justice Institute over these many years. They are in good hands.

Clara A. Thomas Boggs
Former editor-in-chief and co-publisher
Justice:Denied - The Magazine for the Wrongly Convicted

Message From Hans Sherrer

There would not have been a Justice:Denied, nor would it have survived this long, without Clara Boggs. Clara has earned her place as one of the most important people in this country’s history at exposing the prevalence of wrongful convictions, and how and why they occur.

The only visible change to Justice:Denied’s readers from Clara stepping down from her positions is that the magazine now has a Seattle, Washington address. Mail sent to JD’s Coquille, Oregon address is being forwarded to Seattle. In the next issue I will report on some of the things JD and The Justice Institute are doing to promote awareness of issues related to wrongful convictions.

Hans Sherrer
Publisher
Justice:Denied - The Magazine for the Wrongly Convicted
http://justicedenied.org

Justice:Denied’s logo represents the snake of evil and injustice climbing up on the scales of justice.

Information About Justice:Denied

Six issues of Justice:Denied magazine costs $10 for prisoners and $20 for all other people and organizations. Prisoners can pay with stamps and pre-stamped envelopes. A sample issue costs $3. See order form on page 27. An information packet will be sent with requests that include a 37¢ stamp or a pre-stamped envelope. Write: Justice Denied - Info, PO Box 68911, Seattle, WA 98168.

DO NOT SEND JUSTICE:DENIED ANY LEGAL WORK!

Justice:Denied does not and cannot give legal advice.

If you have an account of a wrongful conviction that you want to share, please read and follow the Submission Guidelines on page 26. If page 26 is missing, send a SASE or a 37¢ stamp with a request for an information packet to, Justice Denied - Info, PO Box 68911, Seattle, WA 98168. Cases of wrongful conviction submitted in accordance with Justice:Denied’s guidelines will be considered for publication. Submissions are reviewed by Justice:Denied for their suitability to be published. Justice:Denied reserves the right to edit all submitted accounts for any reason.

Justice:Denied is published at least four times yearly by The Justice Institute, a 501(c)(3) non-profit organization. If you want to financially support the important work of publicizing wrongful convictions, tax deductible contributions can be made to:

The Justice Institute
PO Box 68911
Seattle, WA 98168

Justice:Denied volunteers directly contributing to this issue:

Karyse Phillips, Editor
Sheila Howard, Editor
Lana Nielsen, Volunteer Coordinator
Katherine Oleson, Editor
Clara Boggs, Editor
Hans Sherrer, Publisher
Justice Denied Editorial

Judge Mary Ann Ottinger Has Earned Removal From Office

On June 18, 2004 the Washington State Commission on Judicial Conduct (CJC) censured King County District Court Judge Mary Ann Ottinger, “for, among other misconduct, engaging in a pattern or practice of violating criminal defendants’ fundamental constitutional and due process rights.” Judge Ottinger’s conduct included failing to advise unrepresented defendants at arraignment that they had the right to court-appointed counsel, the right to remain silent, and the right not to incriminate him or herself. She also accepted guilty pleas without informing defendants of the elements of the crime that had to be proven by the prosecution beyond a reasonable doubt, the maximum available penalty that could be imposed, and other legal consequences of a guilty plea.

The CJC noted “The nature, extent and frequency of the due process violations, in particular, have been significant. ... Because the practices implicate the Constitutional rights of the defendants involved, the nature of the violations cannot be overstated.” It further stated, “The extent to which Respondent’s [Ottinger’s] failure to properly advise defendants of their rights has had a substantial impact on the rights of the defendant’s involved.” Her misconduct was particularly grave, because “Protecting the rights of accused individuals is one of the highest duties of any judicial officer.”

The censure was part of a stipulated agreement the CJC entered into with Judge Ottinger. That agreement imposed several sanctions, the most meaningful of which was, “Respondent agrees that she will participate in training approved in advance by the CJC, related to the proper administration of her court, including proper procedures for rights advisement...” In giving Judge Ottinger such a mild punishment for such serious judicial misconduct, the CJC took into the consideration the mitigating factor that she “...acknowledges her need to change or modify the conduct in question and represents that she will do so...”

We now know Judge Ottinger didn’t mean it and she successfully pulled the wool over the eyes of the CJC’s members.

On June 14, 2005, the CJC filed a Statement of Charges against Judge Ottinger in which it is alleged that on July 7, 2004, less than a month after the filing of the agreement in which she effectively agreed in writing to respect a “criminal defendants’ fundamental constitutional and due process rights,” the CJC received a complaint that she was continuing to fail to do so. (See, Judge Charged With Contumacy To Conceal Defendants’ Rights, on page 11 of this issue of JD.) The CJC commenced a new investigation of Judge Ottinger that resulted in the filing of the new charges that substantially dupli cate those that were resolved by the stipulated agreement filed on June 18, 2004. The CJC’s new complaint alleges that from August to November 2004, Judge Ottinger “repeatedly failed to comply with court rules and case law requiring full advisement of rights to counsel for criminal defendants at arraignments. In multiples cases, Respondent failed to properly advise criminal defendants of their right to counsel, of the elements of the crimes to which they pled guilty, and she “consistently failed to determine the defendants’ understanding of the proceedings.”

The new complaint also alleges that Judge Ottinger committed serious misconduct related to bail hearings, probation revocation proceedings and alleged offenses involving non-citizens.

The CJC has the goods on Judge Ottinger since the Statement of Charges documents the defendant’s name, the case number, and the date of more than a dozen representative alleged violations.

It needs to be kept in mind that every single person whose “fundamental constitutional and due process rights” has either admitted to having been violated by Judge Ottinger over god knows how many years, was at that time as legally innocent under the law of what they were accused of as you and I.

The CJC, in its wisdom, has twice made fools of the CJC’s members that they would continue to engage in “proper procedures for rights advisement” and that they had the right to court-appointed counsel, the right to remain silent, and the right not to incriminate him or herself. We know with a moral certainty that she refused to inform defendants of their “fundamental constitutional and due process rights” and that it wasn’t due to inadvertence or ignorance, because after agreeing in writing to “proper procedures for rights advisement,” she continued to repeatedly not do so throughout the many months that the CJC’s investigation in 2004 was conducted.

Judge Ottinger’s knowledge and intent is further established by her response to the CJC after it granted her the “insiders” courtesy of informingally contacting her in 2002 after it received complaints about her lack of concern for the rights of defendants. Judge Ottinger “represented that she would correct her plea acceptance and rights advisement practices in the future to comply with CRRLJ 4.3 and Washington law.” It was Judge Ottinger’s failure to abide by what was her false representation to the CJC in 2002 that caused the initiation of the official proceeding that resulted in the June 18, 2004, stipulated agreement.

Judge Ottinger is every prosecutors dream judge, because she effectively sweeps aside the “fundamental constitutional and due process rights” that are the only impediment to a defendants summary conviction. Her actions systematically undermine whatever meager confidence people both in and out of her courtroom may have in the fairness of the criminal process. Each issue of Justice:Denied bears witness to the human carnage of lost dignity, life and property caused by the dismissive attitude of Judge Ottinger and other state and federal judges of her ilk across the country.

Judge Ottinger is a habitual offender who has twice made fools of the CJC’s members by tricking them into not taking effective remedial action against her — and people who in “proper procedures for rights advisement” were denied because of it. The complaint filed on June 14, 2005 details the considerable depth of Judge Ottinger’s deception and her cavalier manner of “thumbing her nose” at the CJC’s mistaken belief that she signed last years stipulated agreement in good-faith.

Since 1982 the CJC has made the decision in three cases that the appropriate remedy for a judge’s egregious misconduct was removal from office.

Judge Ottinger’s removal would be a foregone conclusion if she had committed the one-time offense of taking the bribe of a car to fix a case, or feloniously assaulted a defendant who appeared before her. Yet those are petty offenses compared to the pervasive constitutionally volatile misconduct she admitted to in 2002 and 2004, and which she is now charged with continuing to engage in.

One does not have to resort to hyperbole to describe the seriousness of Judge Ottinger’s deliberate and egregious misconduct over a period of years that has obliterated “the integrity ... of the judiciary,” and demonstrated her contempt for being “faithful to the law.”

A judge engaging in that quality of misconduct has earned removal from office.

Judge Ottinger earned removal from office for her censured conduct last year. She likely has powerful friends in high places, and that may be why the CJC has thus far chosen to ignore the gravity of her misconduct by agreeing to gently admonish her with “tsk-tsks” taps on her wrist. However the charges against Judge Ottinger transcend political back-scratching because they concern the quality of the type of society we live in - and aspire to live in.

A CJC spokesperson anticipates the public hearing concerning the complaint of June 14, 2005, will be scheduled for the fall of 2005. The hearings outcome will determine whether the CJC will be given the opportunity to rectify her error of last year by deciding that Judge Ottinger has earned removal from office. That is unless Judge Ottinger takes the cowards way out by resigning before-hand with full pension benefits, or the CJC once again shirks its oversight obligation to protect the public from judges like Ottinger, by protecting a judge who has chosen to avoid responsibility for her actions that are destructive to the social fabric of our society.

Hans Sherrer
Did Columbus Cops Shoot And Jail The Wrong Man? - The David Kibble Story

By Martin Yant

The bewitching hour of midnight is historically viewed as a time of bad luck, and that certainly proved true for David Kibble on June 19, 2004. Because of an unfortunate intersection of unrelated events just after midnight that evening, Kibble was shot and seriously wounded by a Columbus police officer and ended up in prison for a crime he never committed.

Kibble’s bad luck went beyond getting shot when he was charged on June 24 with felonious assault of Officer Adam Hicks even though every statement taken by police until then indicated that Kibble was chased by one or two men into the alley in which Hicks shot him at approximately 12:06 a.m. With gun drawn, Hicks was looking for an armed suspect in a car-jacking who reportedly was wearing a red shirt when Kibble, who also was wearing a red shirt, ran into the alley while pulling a knife out of his pocket in case he had to defend himself from the men chasing him, one of whom he believed had a gun. Doctors said later that two of the bullets went right through Kibble. A third lodged in his upper gastric area and was removed during surgery.

To add insult to literal injury, Kibble was later forced to enter an Alford plea, through which the defendant pleads guilty while maintaining his innocence, as part of a plea-bargain agreement that kept him from risking up to 10 years in prison. Instead, Kibble got a one-year sentence, almost half of which he was credited with having already served while in jail awaiting trial.

Defense attorney Mike Morgan said he recommended that Kibble take the plea bargain because the only witnesses Kibble could count on testifying were two relatives, whose testimony jurors tend to discount. Morgan feared that the only other witness to the shooting — Alan Dukes, who admitted he was chasing Kibble at the time of the shooting — wouldn’t show up to testify because there was an arrest warrant out for him. (Dukes said later he planned to testify.)

Kibble’s fate seemed to be sealed on July 6, when Officer Hicks gave a prepared statement to detectives in the presence of his attorney. Hicks claimed that Kibble had approached him in a threatening manner while holding a knife and that he continued to come toward Hicks after being told to stop and drop the knife. Although Hicks’ statement was at odds with every statement given by those who witnessed the shooting or the events leading up to it as well as the physical evidence found at the scene, the two detectives who took the statement did not ask him about the inconsistencies.

The events leading to the tragedy of errors on June 19 started shortly before midnight, when officers were dispatched to 1271 E. 17th Avenue. According to a cell-phone caller, Melvin Collins, a man Officer Smith Weir and others were looking for concerning a reported car-jacking that evening, was standing in front of the home at that address with a handgun.

Weir said police were also looking for Collins because, according to Detective Brian Carney’s interview summary, “he was suppose[d] to fight a gentleman named Jamal Lewis AKA J-Rock. Officer Weir indicated that each time they would get close to where the gentlemen were fighting, everyone would run away.”

Something close to that apparently happened again when Weir and other officers approached 1271 E. 17th Avenue. Vickie Johnson, who lived across the street at 1290 E. 17th Avenue, told Detective Dana Farbacher that she saw “several police officers” chase a man from the area. Farbacher’s report says “Johnson described this individual as a male black wearing a red shirt...”

Detective Carney interviewed Alan Dukes on June 24, he told a story very similar to everyone else’s. Not that it mattered. Although every statement on the record has pointed to Hicks as the one who fired the shot, “scared the hell out of [Hicks]” because he had a red shirt on, as did the man they were looking for. Although Adams apparently arrested suspect Melvin Collins, court records show that Kibble and Collins have approximately the same height and weight, which could lead to temporary misidentification in a dark alley on a star-croswed night.

But that is something to which Hicks — after three weeks to develop 20-20 hindsight — was not about to admit. Instead, Hicks gave Gillette the ammunition he needed to back up the charges he had filed against Kibble when he read a prepared statement to Gillette and another detective on July 6 with his attorney, Grant Shaub, by his side.

Hicks first told how he walked down the alley, with his gun drawn, to check out a fight. “After walking about 40 or 50 yards, I could see that two male blacks were fighting in the back of the alley and a third black male appeared to be watching the fight,” Adams said. (There actually were three men watching the fight.) “I knew what Melvin Collins looked like and he was not one of the three people in the alley,” Hicks said in an apparent attempt to undercut the argument that he thought Kibble was Collins. At this point, Hicks’ version of events diverges radically from the statements of every other witness and the physical evidence. For starters, Hicks said the two men stopped only after he had yelled at them three or four times to do so. No one else reported Hicks yelling anything at this time. In fact, the only person who reported hearing Hicks shout anything at any time was David Kibble, who said he started to drop his knife when Hicks ordered him to. Hicks said he was only 15 to 20 feet away from them at that point.

“One of the men who had been fighting then reached with his right hand into his pants pocket and pulled out of a knife,” Hicks said. “He quickly flicked his wrist and the knife blade opened up. The man with the knife began heading toward the man he had just been fighting with yelling, ‘I’m going to f kill you.’ I immediately ordered the man to drop the knife. . . . At this point, I tucked my flashlight in my pants and held my gun with both hands, pointed it at the man with the knife and order[ed] him to drop it.”

Instead, Hicks claimed, the man with the knife began heading toward him as Hicks continued to yell at him to drop the knife. Hicks said he then took a couple of steps back, but the man continued to come toward him until he had entered what Hicks believed was “the zone of danger” even though Hicks had kept shouting at the man to stop.

At this point, Hicks said, he believed the man “intended to attack me with his knife in an attempt to seriously wound or kill me.” Hicks said he then “fired three shots at his
When he was asked to draw on the crime-scene sketch where the men were when they were fighting and where Kibble was when he shot him, Hicks indicated that the fighting occurred in a part of the parking lot close to the alley and that Kibble was in the middle of the alley when he shot him. No blood was found at either of these locations. But that wasn’t the only oddity about Hicks’ statement. Among the other questions it raised were:

- If Kibble “immediately dropped the knife and fell to the ground,” when Hicks shot him in the middle of the alley, how did both Kibble and the knife end up in the grass by a fence more than 10 feet farther south?
- If Hicks shouted several times at the men to get them to stop fighting and several more times for Kibble to drop the knife, why didn’t the other police officers or any of the witnesses say they heard his repeated shouts? And why wouldn’t the other officers have rushed to his aid as he kept shouting for Kibble to “drop it”?
- If Hicks was standing where he said he was, how did two of the casings from his weapon—which usually only travel a few feet to the side—end up 18 and 22 feet further away?
- Why did Alan Dukes, Donnell Broomfield and Freddie Kibble, the three known witnesses to the shooting, say David Kibble was being chased at the time of the shooting?
- How did a man matching the description of Dukes’ passenger turn up on a video taken minutes after the shooting showing how a bullet had gone through his baggy shorts if he wasn’t chasing Kibble—or at least reasonably close to him?
- But the biggest question of all is: How can the Columbus Police Department turn a victim of circumstances like David Kibble into a prisoner for a crime that all the evidence it gathered other than a self-serving statement by one police officer indicated did not even occur?

David Kibble, meanwhile, is now Inmate A485895 on the Pickaway Correctional Institution, where he says he is living a nightmare come true. “I didn’t do anything wrong that night and I ended up getting shot three times and being sentenced to prison for a crime that didn’t happen,” Kibble says. Kibble says he immediately regretted accepting the plea bargain after he entered his Alford plea and was taken back to jail. Then he realized it would take longer to withdraw his plea—a motion that is rarely granted—before he would be released from prison.

Kibble will have to start over from scratch then. He has lost almost everything he owned, including his car, as well as his girlfriend. And he now will have a first-degree felony on his record—all of which he said would happen even under the best-case scenario.

“Tha’s crazy,” Alan Dukes, one of the two men chasing David Kibble at the time of the shooting said when he was told of Kibble’s conviction. “All he [Kibble] was trying to do was get away from us. I was shocked when I saw the officer start shooting for no reason. It didn’t make any sense. That’s why I took off. I was scared of what might happen next.”

Given what happened to David Kibble, Dukes may have made a wise decision.

In Memoriam
Fred Korematsu (1919-2005)

Fred Korematsu was living in San Leandro, California when a May 3, 1942 U.S. Army directive ordered him to leave his home and report within six days to a federal imprisonment facility. Since he had not been convicted, or even accused of committing any crime, he ignored the order. He went on living his life as if the order hadn’t been issued. On May 30, 1942 he was charged with failing to obey the order to report to the prison facility and arrested. Represented pro bono by San Francisco attorney Wayne M. Collins, Mr. Korematsu’s defense was that as a native-born American the order violated his right to due process of law. Although the facts of his case were that he had not been indicted, tried or convicted of any crime when his imprisonment was ordered, he was convicted in U.S. District Court and his conviction was affirmed by the federal Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. In December 1944 the U.S. Supreme Court affirmed his conviction by a vote of six to three.

Thirty-seven years later a private researcher, historian Peter Irons, discovered internal government memos proving that federal lawyers and possibly other officials fabricated evidence relied upon by the federal courts to affirm Mr. Korematsu’s conviction. Two years later, in November 1983, a federal judge in San Francisco vacated Mr. Korematsu’s conviction. However the discovery of that exculpatory evidence was too late to affect the impact of the Supreme Court’s 1944 decision: The Court’s affirmation of Mr. Korematsu’s conviction depended on their endorsement of the legality of the order of May 3, 1942, that was authorized by President Franklin Roosevelt’s February 1942 Executive Order 9066, 7 Fed. Reg. 1407. That Executive Order (9066) was relied on by the federal government to summarily, and as was proven decades later, wrongly imprison 120,000 U.S. residents of Japanese ancestry. Mr. Korematsu was a native-born American of Japanese descent.

What historian Irons found were misplaced and mislabeled records related to the federal government’s strategy and legal briefs opposing Mr. Korematsu’s appeal. U.S. Solicitor General Charles Fahy headed the government’s legal team, and in one memo Justice Department lawyers accused Fahy of lying to the Supreme Court in his briefs and oral arguments. To justify Roosevelt’s order as militarily necessary for the country’s national security, Fahy argued, for example, that Japanese-Americans on the West Coast were communicating with Japanese ships by “extensive radio signaling and in shore-to-ship signaling.” However it was known to government lawyers that the alleged “signaling” was actually the light of a flashlight used by people living near the coast to see the way to an outdoor toilet at night. The Justice Department contended in the internal memos that there were no known acts of treason (much less widespread activities) by Japanese-Americans on the West Coast supporting the orders for their summary imprisonment.

In 1988 federal legislation was approved authorizing $20,000 in compensation to each surviving Japanese-American wrongly imprisoned as a consequence of Roosevelt’s Executive Order 9066.

The Justice Department memos revealing that there was no factual basis for the wrongful imprisonment of 120,000 legally innocent Japanese-Americans would not have been written if Mr. Korematsu had meekly assented to the federal government’s desire to indeterminately imprison him without so much as an accusation of criminal wrongdoing. So thanks to Mr. Korematsu’s moral courage, more of the truth is known about that episode in U.S. history than if he had kowtowed to the order for his summary imprisonment for the non-crime of having Japanese ancestors. The treatment he declined to accept was described by U.S. Supreme Court Justice Murphy in another case as bearing “…a melancholy resemblance to the treatment accorded to members of the Jewish race in Germany and in other parts of Europe.” Hirabayashi v. United States, 320 U.S. 81, 63 S.Ct. 1375, 1389, 1390 (J. Murphy concurring).

In April 2004 Mr. Korematsu once again stood up for the wrongly imprisoned. He filed a friend-of-the-court brief with the U.S. Supreme Court on behalf of the many hundreds of people indeterminately imprisoned at the Guantánamo Bay Naval Station in Cuba without being charged with any crime. The federal government mimicked its position in his case sixty years earlier, by contending that the military necessity of protecting the nation’s security justified indeterminately imprisoning uncharged people without having their case reviewed in federal court. Mr. Korematsu’s brief stated in part, “The extreme nature of the government’s position is all too familiar.” However unlike his case, in June 2004 the Supreme Court ruled that the people from dozens of countries imprisoned at Guantánamo Bay were entitled to a legal review of their case that could possibly result in their release. See, Rasul v. Bush, 124 S.Ct. 2686 (U.S. 06/28/2004). That is particularly important because international human rights organizations have estimated that upwards of 90% of the people imprisoned by the federal government as alleged “terrorists” since September 11, 2001 are innocent of any wrongdoing. Those people were swept into a state of indeterminate imprisonment due to simply being of a disfavored ethnicity or being in the wrong place at the wrong time.

Fred Korematsu died of respiratory failure on March 29, 2005. He was 86 years old.

Korematsu v. U.S., 140 F2d 289 (9th Cir. 12/02/1943)

Report Downplays Wrongful Convictions in U.S.

By Hans Sherrerr

Exoneration in the United States: 1989 through 2003 is a report by University of Michigan professors and law students. The report analyzed data from 328 cases during that 15 year period in which the defendant was officially declared, “not guilty of a crime for which he or she had previously been convicted.”

The report concentrates on rape and murder convictions, since 319 of the 328 cases studied involved a defendant convicted of one or both of those crimes. One of two areas the researchers focused on, was how often several factors known to contribute to a wrongful conviction—eyewitness misidentification, perjury and a false confession—were present in those cases. It was found that 64% of the people exonerated of rape and/or murder had been misidentified, 15% had falsely confessed, and a prosecution witness had committed perjury in 44% of the cases.

The other area reported on is how race relates to exoneration. It was found that people of various races are exonerated at about the same rate as they are convicted—unless the person was under 18 at the time of arrest. Almost eight
Mickey Davis continued on page 13
Crime Lab Technician Whose Testimony Contributed to Murder Conviction of Two Innocent Men Sues For Libel

By Hans Sherrer

gunpowder. 5 It also wasn’t surprising to William Thompson, a criminology and law professor at UC-Irvine. Thompson said, “The FBI’s analysis was essentially worthless. There wasn’t a firm scientific basis for saying it was gunpowder or not.” 6

After the charges were dismissed, Boots and Proctor filed a $42 million federal civil rights lawsuit against the city of Springfield and two police officers involved in the investigation. The lawsuit alleged that the two policemen had pressured witnesses at their trial to commit perjury and that they hid exonerating evidence. 7 The suit also alleged that the Springfield police department framed the men for Oliver’s murder in retaliation for Boots’ false arrest lawsuit.

On May 7, 1998, the men’s lawsuit was settled for $2 million. Proctor and Boots received $1 million each for an ordeal that lasted a total of 15 years - from their fateful visit to the convenience store in June 1986 to the settlement of their lawsuit in May 1998. However neither of the two policemen named in the lawsuit suffered personally. One of them was even promoted to being a Springfield police department captain. 8

Seattle P-I Reports On Vaughn’s Checkered Past

Six years later, in December 2004, the Seattle Post-Intelligencer (P-I) published an investigative article that revealed Charles Vaughan retired from the Oregon State Police crime lab a few months after Boots and Proctor’s exoneration, and two months later (in July 1995) he was hired by the Washington State Patrol’s (WSP) crime lab.

Barry Logan is the director of the WSP’s crime lab, and he told the P-I that until the newspaper informed him of Vaughan’s background, he was unaware of Vaughan’s role in the wrongful conviction of Boots and Proctor. Logan said, “He never told anybody that I’ve spoken to about his involvement in this case.” 9 Logan also said indicated there was no mention of the case in Vaughan’s employment application or when he was interviewed, there was no mention of the case by references provided by Vaughan prior to his hiring, nor did it show up during his pre-employment background check. 10

The deception Vaughan perpetrated on the Washington State Patrol and its crime lab about his background had to be complete that a July 1995 WSP memo noted he was a “recognized expert in blood-spatter interpretation” and that he “had agreed to be a lead instructor on that subject at a State Patrol academy.” 11 That was memo written only a few months after two innocent men were exonerated of murder after being convicted in part of the basis of Vaughan’s insubstantial laboratory analysis and courtroom testimony concerning blood-spatter evidence.

The P-I’s article disclosed that in addition to his erroneous testing of evidence and insubstantial courtroom testimony in the Boots and Proctor case, Vaughan was “demoted in 1993 from director of the Eugene lab to assistant director after he failed to discipline an employee accused of falsifying test results.” 12 Vaughan admitted to the demotion during a deposition related to the 1995 lawsuit filed by Boots and Proctor.

The P-I also reported that in September 1999 a national accreditation team inspecting the WSP’s crime lab discovered that “Vaughan had made a mistake on an annual proficiency exam a year earlier. Vaughan failed to interpret footprint evidence correctly.” 13

Also in September 1999, burglary charges were dismissed against a defendant in Thurston County, Washington when it was determined that Vaughan had erroneously concluded hair found at the crime scene was linked to the defendant. 14 Vaughan defended his analysis by claiming that the “subjective nature” of analyzing hair evidence can result in different interpretations of its evidentiary value. 15 If Vaughan’s explanation that hair analysis is a subjective ‘black art’ was judicially accepted, its admissibility could be challenged as non-scientific under Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, 509 U.S. 579 (1993) and its progeny.

So it is known that Vaughan provided insubstantial testimony in two murder cases about gunpowder residue and blood spatter interpretation. He provided testimony in a burglary case related to hair analysis that the judge did not deem to be substantial, and he failed a footprint identification proficiency test. In addition, Vaughan’s regard for objective scientific inquiry by crime lab technicians is so minimal that he was demoted for tactfully approving of an OSP crime lab technician’s falsification of test results so they would be prosecution favorable.

It is also known that Vaughan was somewhat less than forthcoming with an honest accounting of his background when he was hired by a police agency of the State of Washington as a crime lab technician. That raises the possibility that he induced that same deception into the Washington State Patrol - to hire him under false pretenses and that his termination may be warranted. Particularly considering the similarities between Arnold Melnikoff’s case and that of Vaughan. Melnikoff was terminated as a WSP crime lab technician on March 23, 2004 based on his role in Paul Kordonowy’s wrongful rape conviction in Montana. 16 Kordonowy’s case was one of three Montana cases in which Melnikoff’s prosecution favorable testimony contributed to the rape conviction of an innocent man. 5 Melnikoff was the Director of the Montana State Police Crime Laboratory prior to being hired as a WSP crime lab technician.

Vaughn Sues Seattle P-I & Tacoma News-Tribune

In May 2005 Vaughan responded to the P-I’s disclosures in its December 27, 2004 article by filing a libel lawsuit against the P-I and the article’s author, reporter Ruth Teichroeb. Vaughan alleges he was libeled by the assertions in the article that the conviction of Boots and Proctor was attributable to his “lab work and testimony.” 18 The P-I’s legal counsel said that Vaughan demanded a correction or retraction in February 2005, but when he was “invited to cite specific misstatements of fact, … he never responded.” 19

Vaughan also filed a libel lawsuit against the Tacoma, Washington News-Tribune for stating in a January 4, 2005 editorial that “he “botched” the Oregon case because of “ sloppy procedures.”” 20

The P-I reported that Vaughan “contends both papers damaged his professional reputation and caused him ongoing emotional distress.” 21 The former claim would seem on its face to have dubious merit because Vaughan damaged his own “professional reputation” by making what are known to be the insubstantive analysis of physical evidence related to gunpowder residue, blood-spatters, footprints and hair, and for not considering any punishment was warranted for a crime lab technician’s falsification of evidence test results. The P-I simply reported facts that are important for the public to know about the suspect competence level and overt secretiveness of a Washington State public employee whose erroneous judgments can, and have had a profound effect on the life of multiple innocent people.

Insofar as the News-Tribune’s editorial is concerned, the language it used was what could be expected of a layperson (such as a newspaper editorial writer) in response to being informed about Vaughan’s performance in the Boots and Proctor case (and who knows many more cases that have yet been brought to light): In lay terms Vaughan “botched” the case to the point that two innocent men spent eight years imprisoned for a murder they had nothing to do with.

Crime Lab Tech continued on page 8
Bar-Hopping Alibi Against Murder Charge — Richard Stallings’ Story

By Richard Stallings

Edited by Clara Boggs

May 1996 Trial

The prosecuting attorneys built their case on the information of several witnesses who were closely acquainted with the victim, not withstanding the crime lab saying that the victim’s blood was on my purple leather pants.

The first of the state’s witnesses to testify was Ms. Wanda Ray, a neighbor who lived practically a block away from the victim. She testified that on January 21, 1995 she was preparing for bed around 8:30 p.m. and she heard three loud gunshots. Huey James Love, testified that he had a scheduled date with Ms. Meredith around 6:30 p.m. that same day, that when he noticed me following him in my white Lincoln Continental. He also alleged that he called Ms. Meredith to get my car phone number, but was unable to reach me when he called, but when he called Ms. Meredith back, she informed him that I was there.

During the execution of the search warrant a pair of cowboy boots, a pair of purple leather pants, and a matching leather sweater were confiscated and sent to the crime lab for testing.

Nearly six months later, I was re-arrested on July 12, 1995 on a warrant for first-degree murder and armed criminal action and was held in the county jail without bail. I was able to obtain the service of attorney Mark Komorski to represent me at trial.

My defense was an alibi defense. My trial began May 6, 1996.

Crime Lab Tech continued from page 7

It is unknown if Boots or Proctor sympathize with Vaughan’s claim that the P-I and News-Tribune’s truthful public disclosure of his role in their ordeal caused him “emotional distress.”

Endnotes:

3 Id.
4 Money no recompense for youth, Charles E. Beggs, Oregonian, May 9, 1998, p. D5
5 Forensic Scientist in Washington Crime Lab Tied to Wrongful Convictions in Oregon, supra.
6 Id.
8 Id.
9 Forensic Scientist in Washington Crime Lab Tied to Wrongful Convictions in Oregon, supra.
10 Id.
11 Id.
12 Id.
13 Id.
14 Id.
15 Id.
16 John K. Wiley, State Patrol files embittered crime-lab scientists, The Seattle Times, March 24, 2004, page B3. (“Forensic scientists with expertise in fiber and hair examinations later concluded Melnikoff’s testimony on the number of hair examinations he had conducted and statistical comparisons contained “egregious misstatements.“”) Id.
17 Paul Kordonowy was prosecuted in Montana, and Melnikoffs testimony in the case was based on work he allegedly performed while employed at the MSPCL. Id.
18 Richard Breitcreh, Shadow of Doubt, Seattle Post-Intelligencer, March 13, 2004, A1, A7. (Those three men, all wrongly convicted of rape, were Chester Bauer, John Proctor, and Richard Stallings.) The three men were separately wrongly imprisoned for 14, 15 and 13 years.
19 21 Id.
20 21 Id.

Please notify Justice Denied promptly of a Change in Address or Write: Justice Denied - COA P.O. Box 68911 Seattle, WA 98168

Justice Denied: The Magazine for the Wrongly Convicted

PAGE 8

ISSUE 28 - SPRING 2005

Richard Stallings continued on page 9
48 Years After Wrongful Conviction - Eddie Mayes' Sentence Commuted

By JD Staff

In November 1956, twenty-one-year-old Eddie Mayes was living in central Florida when he traveled to northern Georgia to visit his family. One night he went riding in a car with his half-brother and one of his friends. After Eddie had fallen asleep in the back seat, he woke up when the police stopped the car and arrested the three young black men for a series of robberies in five Georgia counties.

Although his brother admitted he was involved in the robberies, he told the police his brother was just visiting from Florida and he had nothing to do with them. He also told the judge when he pled guilty, that Eddie wasn’t involved in the robberies. Eddie knew how unfair and vindictive white Southern justice was toward blacks who protested their innocence and went to trial. So he pled guilty after being told he would be given a short sentence.

Eddie married in 1969. He had two sons and a daughter with his wife Ethel. However he never told her he was a wanted fugitive, so it came as a shock to her when he was arrested at their home on March 5, 2004. After 44 years of freedom, Eddie had gotten careless and submitted an application to be put on the visiting list of his son, who was serving a 27 month sentence in a Florida prison for burglary. His application was red flagged when the criminal background check of his application reported that Eddie Miller was an alias of Eddie Mayes — wanted for a 1960 escape in Georgia.

After three months of investigation, police confirmed they were the same person. Sixty-nine year-old Eddie was arrested at his home in Florida and extradited to Georgia. The Georgia Department of Corrections sent him to the high security Autry State Prison in Pelham to finish serving his sentence as prisoner #363086.

Eddie’s scheduled release date was January 18, 2025 — when he would be 90 years old.

However on June 1, 2004 — three months after his arrest — Eddie was notified that on its own initiative, the Georgia State Board of Pardons and Paroles had voted unanimously to commute his sentence to time served. In making its decision, the Board took into consideration his age, that no weapons were involved in his convicted crimes, and that he had stayed out of serious legal trouble while on the lam for 44 years. The only two brushes he had with the law were a speeding citation, and a $500 fine in 1982 for transporting fruit without a ticket. When Eddie was released from prison on June 11, his wife of 35 years met him at the front gate and drove him back home to Florida.

Eddie was hiding in plain sight when he was arrested in March 2004. He was living in Fort Pierce, the same town he lived in when he was wrongly accused and convicted of breaking out of prison in 1956, and the first place he went after his prison escape. Eddie points to his many decades of clean living after his escape as further proof of his innocence: “In 44 years, if I had done something with robbery or burglary, I would have done something between then. I’m clean as a whistle.” Although it may be a long shot, at some point in time the governor of Georgia may acknowledge the wrong committed against Eddie Miller 48 years ago by granting him a pardon.

To that end Eddie has begun work on a book about his case that he hopes will raise enough money to pay for the legal legwork necessary to exonerate him. As Eddie said after his release, “I just want to get all this behind me. I just want to clear my name up.”

Sources:
1. Second chance after life on lam: Eddie Mayes is caught in his Fort Pierce home 44 years after escaping a work gang. by Post Staff and Wire Reports, Palm Beach Post, July 05, 2004, p. A1.
2. Id.
3. Id.

Marlinga Bribery Prosecution Update

Macomb County Prosecutor Carl Marlinga was federally indicted in April 2004 after co-defendants Jeffrey Moldovan and Michael Cristini were exonerated of kidnap- ping and rape charges after being wrongly imprisoned for 12 years and 13 years respectively. Marlinga’s indictment related to his alleged acceptance of a bribe to structure a brief to the Michigan Supreme Court so that Moldovan would be granted a new trial. (See, Prosecutor Indicted For Bribery After Two Men Exonerated Of Kidnapping And Rape, Justice Denied, Winter 2005, Issue 27.)

Two other men, Ralph Roberts and James Barcia were also indicted — Roberts for allegedly making the bribe, and Barcia for allegedly structuring the bribe as a federal campaign contribution.

In February 2005 the trial judge dismissed the indictment against the three men on the grounds that it improperly linked them into an over-arching conspiracy unsupported by the facts. The government had no proof, e.g., that Roberts and Barcia knew each other, or had ever had any communication with each other prior to their indictment. In June 2005 the Justice Department announced that all charges were being dropped against Roberts. Barcia’s lawyer said that the charges against him would be dropped after he completed a diversion program that would consist of obeying federal and state laws and other unspecified conditions for six months to a year.

Barcia, a former U.S. Congressman, said, “Having my name and my image brought into things like an alleged conspiracy with rape defendants and people I had never heard of, I couldn’t believe it. This experience has taught me a little appreciation for why some people fear the federal government. There’s an awful lot of power there that can really affect people’s lives.”

Marlinga said in response to the dismissal of the charges, “I’m pleased both for Ralph Roberts and Jim Barcia, two innocent people who deserve this moment.”

Prosecutors said they intended to go ahead with Marlinga’s prosecution. However they have not indicated what charges would be in a new indictment, since Barcia and Roberts both expressed doubt they would be called as a prosecution witness.

Lawyer: Deal in works for Barcia to take part in diversion program, Detroit Free Press, June 16, 2005.
Out Of The Fire
- The Jennifer Hall Story
By Nadia Pflaum

When Harrisonville fire investigator Wayne Schraml and officers from the Missouri State Fire Marshal’s Office failed to notice a bead of copper on a wire at the Cass County Medical Center after a fire in the respiratory therapy office in 2001, it cost then-20-year-old Jennifer Hall a year of her life in prison.

The fire, which caused an estimated $23,000 in damage to a desk, a computer and a wall in an office (to which Hall had one of the only keys), occurred near tanks that control a flow of oxygen to the entire Harrisonville hospital.

Hall was the respiratory therapist on duty at the hospital when the fire started, shortly after 7 p.m. January 24, 2001. She says she had left the building to get a soda out of her truck, thinking she wouldn’t have time to get it later because she would be observing a patient in a sleep study.

When she heard the fire alarm, she rushed inside the hospital and joined two co-workers. All three heard over the intercom that the fire was located in the respiratory therapy offices. One of the workers, Violet Warren, ran to get a fire extinguisher while Hall and Mark Berry went toward the source of the fire to reach the oxygen-shut-off valve to prevent an explosion.

The trio made it through two doors before the smoke became too heavy for them to continue. Berry leaned farthest into the smoke, trying to see the source of the fire, and Warren reached around Hall to grab Berry’s sleeve and pull him back. When Berry lost his balance, Hall says, he bumped into her accidentally, and she reached out to steady herself on a metal door frame, which was hot.

Schraml and his co-investigator from the fire marshal’s office, Lee Johnson, could find no obvious cause for the blaze but noted the burn on Hall’s hand and what they considered an unusual amount of charred paper in the vicinity of the fire. They concluded that it had been intentionally set. Three weeks later, police arrested Hall.

Hall’s parents, Don and Debi Hall, say they now regret their next move, which was to hire Gary Cover of Clinton, Missouri, a lawyer recommended by a cousin.

In court transcripts, Cover routinely mixes up facts, dates and names. Don and Jennifer Hall say they both asked Cover whether he should examine the computer, clock and other equipment in the fire. But Cover said it was unnecessary. He did contact the assistant prosecutor handling the criminal case and ask to look at the items seized from the scene. But when he was told that the items were in the possession of the insurance company for the hospital, Cover focused instead on proving that Hall wasn’t near the scene of the fire when it started.

Prosecutors Michael Yost and Jamie Hunt told Cass County jurors that Hall had burned herself on a match while setting the fire, not on a hot door frame, and that she had worn her hair curly that day — it was normally straightened — because she expected to be the center of attention after the arson allowed her to stage a heroic attempt to put out the fire.

Schraml, the investigator, testified that he saw no other explanation for the fire and that it must have been intentionally set. The prosecutors, meanwhile, claimed that Hall’s motivation was her unhappiness over a sexual harassment claim that she’d made against a co-worker. “That motive, to us, was just insane,” says Hall’s father, who explains that the man about whom his daughter complained had died of a heart attack two weeks before the fire.

A fire investigator failed to notice a faulty wire — and Jennifer Hall paid dearly for his mistake by being wrongly convicted and imprisoned for arson.

The jury found Hall guilty of second-degree arson and recommended a sentence of three years in prison.

Hall says that on the day of sentencing, Cover advised her that the court might look more favorably upon her if she “took responsibility” for the fire.

“He said that I needed to go with their theory that I was doing it for attention,” Hall tells the Pitch. “And I said, ‘I don’t want to say that, because it’s going to make me look even worse.’” Instead, feeling pressure from her attorney to look conciliatory, she says she made up a story about setting the fire accidentally by dropping a cigarette. “I’ve never smoked,” she says. A probation officer reported Hall’s confession to the judge.

Cover billed the Halls $10,000. The family hired another attorney, Matt O’Connor, for Hall’s appeals.

O’Connor did what Cover did not: He hired an expert, a forensics specialist named Carl Martin.

Martin says that when he was granted access to items removed from the fire scene and examined the power cord on a clock that had been close to where the fire started, he said to himself, “Is this a joke?” A bead of copper gleamed from a small, burned break in the cord, visible to the naked eye. The short circuit hadn’t been noted in the report written by Schraml, the Harrisonville fire investigator whose testimony was key in convicting Hall.

“I don’t know what the heck went on in that case, but I’ve never seen anything like it before,” Martin says. “There wasn’t any doubt that there had been an electrical short circuit. Everything was very consistent with it being a long-term short circuit in a very old power cord on an old clock very near the fire’s origin. It was black-and-white after we tested it. There was no other way.... Unfortunately, the investigators and police and the prosecutors were unable to see that. I don’t know if they had bad vision. I don’t know why they chose not to consider the most significant piece of evidence they had.”

The large amount of paper around the site of the fire can be explained, O’Connor says, by the fact that a black file tray was knocked over during the fire. As the tray melted, the plastic cascaded down the side of the computer in a gooey mess. The paper that was in the tray could have fallen near the site of the fire in a big, charred clump.

O’Connor filed numerous appeals on Hall’s behalf. The first, a motion for a hearing based on newly discovered evidence, was denied. The Missouri Court of Appeals denied a second appeal on July 22, 2003. O’Connor filed a motion in November 2003, claiming that Hall was denied effective assistance of counsel, in part because Cover had failed to investigate possible alternative causes for the fire.

Meanwhile, Hall spent from July 25, 2003, to July 23, 2004, at a women’s maximum-security prison in Vandalia, where she shared a cell with four other inmates.

She recalls being scared her first day. Another inmate told her, “Just act like you’ve been here before, and nobody will mess with you.”

Despite her pretending, the stress got to her. An epileptic, she usually suffered one seizure every eight to ten months, but while in prison, she had two or three a week. Because O’Connor distrusted Vandalia’s medical care for inmates (a well-publicized medication mix-up last summer caused a dozen inmates to be hospitalized), he says he faxed information regarding Hall’s epilepsy medication to the prison every day.

“Not everybody in prison says they’re innocent, but a lot of people do,” Hall says. And like the others, she wasn’t believed. But worse, she says, was the threat she felt living in proximity to a roommate Hall says was serving time for murder.

“I called [O’Connor] to tell him that if I die, this is who did it,” Hall says. “I flat-out told him, I think I’m going to die in here. Bad things can happen there. You wouldn’t believe what people can make into a weapon. Anything.”

Meanwhile, her parents were struggling to afford their daughter’s legal bills. Don, an employee at Kansas City Fire and Security, and Debi, who works as an assistant at an Overland Park dentist’s office, both took night jobs answering phones for Pizza Hut’s delivery line.

On June 29, 2004, the original judge to hear Hall’s case, Jacqueline Cook, found that Hall had received inadequate counsel and agreed that Cover should at least have hired an expert to examine the fire site and damaged equipment. She set aside Hall’s sentence and sent the case back to Cass County for a possible new trial, if prosecutors wanted one.

Hall was paroled from the prison in Vandalia just one week before the judge’s motion to set aside her sentence took effect. But five months later, Cass County Prosecutor Theresa Hensley and her assistant, Jamie Hunt, decided to try her again.

The new jury found Hall not guilty in February 2005.

The Halls are critical of Cass County prosecutors for retrying their daughter. They believe it was done out of spite. O’Connor says that even if the new jury had found her guilty, she would not have been eligible to spend any more time in jail because she had already served her sentence. The new trial cost the Halls another $20,000, bringing their total bill that they owed O’Connor for legal services to $100,000.

Cass County Prosecutor Theresa Hensley says that her office pursued the case because they believed they still had enough evidence to convict Hall. “We could have decided not to retry her,” Hensley says. “Jamie Hunt, who second-chaired the first trial, believed he had enough evidence to find her guilty, that she had, in fact, started the fire. That’s why we have courthouses and a jury system. The experts don’t always agree, and that’s why we have trials. Twelve jurors in the second trial believed their expert [Martin] over our expert [Schraml]. Jamie is a prosecutor I think highly of. I think he has good judgment. I think if you asked him today, he would tell you he still believes she did it.”

Schraml’s colleagues at the Harrisonville Police Department and at the Missouri State Fire Marshal’s Office stand behind him, too. Schraml testified that he has investigated more than 300 fires and that he bases his success on how many convictions his reports have helped secure.

Schraml is taking a medical leave of absence from the Harrisonville Police Department, where he has worked for five years. Lt. Doug Catron, his superior, confirms that Schraml is the department’s only fire investigator. Harrisonville’s population is less than 10,000.

Apparently unaware that Hall had been exonerated, Catron says, “There is a rumor that circulated from the family of Ms. Hall that the fire could have been caused by an extension cord. Our department firmly stands behind both our investigator and the state fire marshal who co-investigated that fire.”

What about the bead of copper on the wire, indicating a short circuit that Schraml missed? And what about O’Connor’s forensic findings?

Jennifer Hall continued on next page
Federal Prosecutor Resigns Under Heat of Criminal Investigation For Possible Frame-up Of 35 People

By JD Staff

In June 2003 two men were convicted in Detroit of providing “material support” for terrorism, and two other men were acquitted of that charge. The verdicts came in the United States’ first major terrorism trial post-September 11, 2001. The chief federal prosecutor was Assistant United States Attorney Richard Convertino.

After their terrorism convictions, the defendants filed a pre-sentence motion for a new trial based on allegations that the prosecutors involved in the case concealed exculpatory evidence and witness statements, and offered tainted testimony. Convertino and his immediate superior were removed from the case in December 2003 after the trial judge ordered the Justice Department to respond to the defendant’s motion. In its response of August 31, 2004, the Justice Department conceded the prosecution committed multiple Brady violations that prejudiced the due process rights of the defendants to a fair trial. On September 2, 2004 the judge vacated the men’s convictions and the terrorism charges were subsequently dismissed. (See: Terrorism Conviction Of 2 Men Tossed – Prosecutor Criminal Investigated For Frame-up, Justice:Denied magazine, Issue 27, Winter 2005, page 7.)

In March 2004 the Justice Department’s Public Integrity Section launched a criminal investigation of Convertino. The impetus for the investigation was that Convertino’s actions in the “terrorism” case may have amounted to nothing less than his orchestration of the deliberate frame-up of four men he had every reason to believe were innocent of materially supporting terrorism. Particularly since there was no evidence the men were guilty except for what Convertino was placed under criminal investigation for possibly committing.

The Detroit News reported in December 2004 that the Justice Department had secretly expanded its criminal investigation of Convertino to include two major drug cases in which a total of 31 defendants were convicted in the late 1990s. Convertino was the lead prosecutor in both cases, that were based on the testimony of numerous defendants who pled guilty and favorably testified for the government in exchange for leniency. Several of those defendants subsequently executed sworn affidavits detailing Convertino’s intimidation of them into committing perjury. Those affidavits came to light when they were included in a petition for a new trial by one of the men whose conviction was based in part on the allegedly perjured testimony. Furthermore, according to the petition Convertino not only concealed the existence of the deals for leniency from the jurors, the trial judge and the defendants, but he was duplicitous about the negotiations that resulted in those deals. According to the Detroit Free Press, “Convertino went to extreme lengths to portray that no agreement had been reached” with the government’s witnesses. The implication of the sworn affidavits and allegations set forth in the petition is that all or some of the 31 convicted defendants in the two cases under investigation may be the innocent victim of a frame-up by Convertino’s use of tactics similar to those used to frame the two innocent terrorism defendants convicted in June 2003. In another case Convertino is being criminally investigated for improperly recommending leniency for an innocent charged with drug crimes.

On May 16, 2005 Richard Convertino resigned after 15 years as an Assistant U.S. Attorney. As of June 2005 no public announcement has been made about completion of the criminal investigation of Convertino.

Jennifer Hall continued from page 10

“Someone could say the sun might not come up tomorrow, and who could refute that?” Catron says.

Deputy Chief Jim Wilson with the state fire marshal’s office tells the Pitch that missing a short circuit is “not uncommon.”

John Spirko Update

John Spirko’s story of being on Ohio’s death row when there is evidence he was over 100 miles from the scene of the crime was in Justice Denied, Winter 2005, Issue 27: Case Based On “Foundation Of Sand” Enough To Send Man To Death Row - The John Spirko Story.

In May 2004, Judge Ronald Lee Gilman on the Federal Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals voted to grant John Spirko an evidentiary hearing, writing that the case against him was built on a “foundation of sand,” and that the “complete absence” of physical evidence raised “considerable doubt” that he had been lawfully convicted. However Judge Gilman was outvoted 2 to 1. Spirko appealed the Sixth Circuit’s decision to the Supreme Court. On March 28, 2005 the Supreme Court declined to hear Spirko’s case.

Spirko’s lawyers then filed a petition with the Federal Court in Detroit, and U.S. District Court Judge Carr has issued discovery orders. In spite of the ongoing legal action (as of late June), the State of Ohio has set a tentative execution date of September 20, 2005.

John Spirko’s website has the most current information about his case, http://www.johnspirko.com

Even Schraml admitted that the cause of the fire might have been a short-circuit. In O’Connor’s deposition of Schraml, taken in December 2004, the officer admitted that the clock cord was a plausible ignition source for the fire. But Schraml told O’Connor that he didn’t get to use a microscope to examine the wire. O’Connor says the bead of metal was visible to the naked eye.

O’Connor calls Schraml “incompetent to the point of being dangerous.” Schraml did not return calls from the Pitch.

Cover, the lawyer found ineffective by Judge Cook, tells the Pitch, “All I can say is, I’m confident that I did a good job in representing Ms. Hall, and my representation was very professional.”

Hall is home now, but the family has installed a security camera that feeds a picture of the front doorstep to a monitor in Hall’s room.

“I’m constantly worried, even now that it’s over, that they’re going to come back with something else,” she says.

Hall, now 24, lives at home and works for Farmer’s Insurance. She is struggling to get licensed, she says, because of her erroneous conviction. She lives at home to help her parents pay her legal bills. The family has hired a new lawyer, Geordie McGonagle, to investigate possible civil suits.

“People still don’t believe you totally, even if you’ve been exonerated,” Hall says.

Judge Charged With Continuing To Conceal Defendants’ Rights

By JD Staff

Washington State court rules and case law requires a judge to publicly advise every defendant on the record of their legal rights at the time of their arraignment, and to advise a defendant of the legal consequences of making a plea of guilty prior to accepting such a guilty plea.

On June 14, 2005 King County, Washington District Court Judge Mary Ann Ottinger was charged by Washington’s Commission on Judicial Conduct (CJC) with failing to inform criminal defendants of their due process rights on numerous occasions from August to November 2004. Among the rights she didn’t inform defendants about were their right to a court-appointed lawyer, their right to remain silent, and their right against making incriminating statements. Judge Ottinger was also charged with repeatedly accepting a guilty plea from a defendant who had not been informed by her of the elements of the crime, the maximum penalty she could impose, and other real and potential consequences of pleading guilty. Judge Ottinger was further charged with imposing bail and pretrial release conditions on defendants without first making a probable cause finding.

In June 2004, Judge Ottinger was censured by the CJC for committing many of the same violations she was charged with committing in the June 2005 complaint. The CJC found that in regards to Judge Ottinger’s conduct, “Because the practices implicate Constitutional rights of the defendants involved, the nature of the violations cannot be overstated.” 1 The CJC also determined that Judge Ottinger’s misconduct was “routine.” (See, WA Judges Concel Rights From Defendants, Justice Denied, Issue 26, Fall 2004, p. 11.)

As punishment for her conduct that she admitted in a stipulate agreement (the equivalent of a plea bargain in a criminal case) violated the Code of Judicial Conduct, Judge Ottinger agreed to being publicly censured, and to participate in training “related to the proper administration of her court, including proper procedures for rights advisement related to accepting pleas and imposing probationary terms and conditions.”

The CJC’s June 2005 complaint documents alleged violations by Judge Ottinger that occurred during the four-month period from August to November 2004, which was after she was censured and agreed to punishment for the previous charges against her. In response to the new complaint, Judge Ottinger’s attorney complained in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer that the CJC was focusing on technicalities, and that “She’s an excellent judge.”

A CJC spokesperson told Justice:Denied that under CJC procedures a public hearing will likely be scheduled for late fall 2005 to determine if Judge Ottinger committed the violations alleged in the new complaint.

Out of about 4,600 complaints that have been made to the CJC from 1982 to June 2005, 118 Washington state judges have been disciplined for violating the Code of Judicial Conduct. The CJC has determined the misconduct of three judges was egregious enough to warrant removal from office.

Justice For All Act Of 2004
By Hans Sherrer

The Justice For All Act of 2004 (JFAA) was signed into law by President Bush on October 30, 2004. Legislatively identified as H.R. 5107, the JFAA was passed by a vote of 393-14 in the House of Representatives on October 6, 2004 and by a unanimous vote of the Senate on October 9, 2004.

The JFAA is comprised of four sections:

- Title I. Crime Victims Rights Act
- Title II. Rape Kits and DNA Evidence Backlog Elimination Act of 2004
- Title III. DNA Sexual Assault Justice Act of 2004
- Title IV. Innocence Protection Act of 2004

The innocent can be affected by one or more sections of the JFAA’s four titles. Those provisions that are most likely to affect the innocent will be briefly analyzed.

Title I. Crime Victims Rights Act

Title I, Section 102 “Establishes enhanced rights for victims of Federal crimes, including the right to be reasonably protected from the accused; the right to reasonable, accurate, and timely notice of certain proceedings and events; the right not to be excluded from certain proceedings; the right to be reasonably heard at certain proceedings and to confer with the attorney for the Government in the case; the right to full and timely restitution....”

Under Title I, an innocent person can have their torment increased prior to their trial, and if wrongly convicted, after their trial, by pressure brought to bear on the prosecutor and/or the court by the victim or alleged victim of the crime.

Title II. Rape Kits and DNA Evidence Backlog Elimination Act of 2004

Title II, Section 202 increases the authorized funding to analyze DNA evidence to $151 million annually for the next five years. This money can be distributed at the state level to fund the testing of potential DNA evidence, including several hundred thousand rape kits nationwide that are unanalyzed.

Section 203 authorizes expansion of the information in the national Combined DNA Index System (CODIS) to include virtually any DNA information a State chooses to collect, with two exceptions: DNA profiles of arrestees who have not been charged in an indictment or information, and DNA samples that are voluntarily submitted solely for elimination purposes.

Section 204 changes federal law so the statute of limitations begins tolling when DNA testing implicates a person in the commission of a felony (except for a felony offense under chap. 109A) - not the date the crime was committed.

Section 206 authorizes State and local governments to spend federal funds to hire private for profit laboratories to analyze DNA in order to reduce their backlog of evidence samples.

Title III. DNA Sexual Assault Justice Act of 2004

Title III, Section 302 “Requires that eligible State and local government public crime labs are accredited and undergo external audits, not less than once every 2 years, to demonstrate compliance with Federal standards established by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.”

Several sections – 303 and 304 - authorize a total of $42.5 million per year to train and educate law enforcement and correctional personnel, prosecutors, defense lawyers, judges, forensic scientists and medical personnel in the identification, collection, preservation and analysis of DNA evidence. Other sections authorize money to advance DNA research and development and FBI DNA programs.

Section 309 expands the potential fine to $100,000 for each federal criminal offense of unauthorized “use” of DNA information.

Title IV. Innocence Protection Act of 2004

Title IV most directly affects the innocent, and it includes three subtitles.

Subtitle 1 - Exonerating The Innocent Through DNA Testing, includes specific guidelines under Section 411 for Federal prisoners asserting a claim of “actual innocence” to apply for DNA testing of potentially exculpatory evidence. Section 411’s language implies retroactivity, and furthermore, it specifically directs that a federal court “shall” grant an applicant’s motion for a new trial or resentencing if “the DNA test results, when considered with all other evidence in the case (regardless of whether such evidence was introduced at trial), establish by compelling evidence that a new trial would result in an acquittal…” Section 411 also “prohibits the destruction of DNA evidence in a Federal criminal case while a defendant remains incarcerated, with certain exceptions.”

A federal defendant with an active case and untested evidence who makes a timely motion to preserve that evidence is excluded from the exceptions. Although diligent enforcement is problematic, Section 411 does codify that “Intentional violations of these evidence-retention provisions to prevent evidence from being tested or used in court are punishable by a term of imprisonment.” It needs to be emphasized that Section 411 only applies to Federal cases, and its provisions are specifically excluded from providing “a basis for relief in any Federal habeas corpus proceeding.”

Subtitle 2 - Improving The Quality of Representation In State Capital Cases, authorizes $5 million a year in grants through 2009 to help States to defray the costs of post-conviction DNA testing.” This program is named in honor of Kirk Bloodsworth, the first death row prisoner to be exonerated by DNA testing. Section 413 authorizes granting that money to “States that have adopted reasonable procedures for providing post-conviction DNA testing and preserving DNA evidence.”

Subtitle 3 - Compensation Of The Wrongfully Convicted, Section 431, “Increases the maximum amount of damages that the U.S. Court of Federal Claims may award against the United States in cases of unjust imprisonment from a flat $5,000 to $50,000 per year in non-capital cases, and $100,000 per year in capital cases.” Although it doesn’t have the force of law, Section 432 “expresses the sense of Congress that States should provide reasonable compensation to any person found to have been unjustly convicted of an offense against the State and sentenced to death.”

Summary

As with all legislation, the JFAA is a product of compromises that watered down some of its provisions from what they were when first proposed over four years prior to its enactment. The Innocence Protection Act of 2004, like the other provisions, was affected by compromises after it was originally introduced in 2001. The JFAA includes a total of $1.26 billion over five years in new grant programs, and over $1 billion of that is earmarked to States for the testing and better understanding of DNA evidence by people at all levels of the law enforcement systems and the improvement of representation in capital cases.

Unfortunately, most of the JFAA amounts to ‘smoke and mirrors’ posturing that will do little if anything to actually protect the innocent. An example is Section 302 that, “Requires that eligible State and local government public crime labs are accredited and undergo external audits, not less than once every 2 years....” The accreditation part of the section means nothing because it simply relates to ensuring crime labs shuffle their paperwork properly. However the “external audit” provision could contribute to improving the competence of technicians, evidence handling and storage procedures, and testing protocols of state and local crime labs, if not for the fact that the FBI is the arbiter of the “external audit” standards to be applied to those labs. That is like putting the fox in charge of guarding the henhouse. There has been a stream of disclosures over the past several decades that the FBI crime lab routinely provides prosecutors with insubstantial evidence test results, and that its technicians regularly either perjure themselves in court or overstate the evidentiary value of a tested item. Those practices continue to this day, and they can be expected to continue for at least as long as the FBI’s crime lab is exempt from independent external auditing. The FBI has shown by its actions that it is unlikely to audit state crime labs with honest vigilance, and that deficiency is compounded by the FBI’s designation in the JFAA as the agency that establishes the standards of the audit. An excellent critique of the FBI’s crime lab’s endemic problems, is Tainting Evidence: Inside the Scandals at the FBI Crime Lab by John F. Kelly and Phillip K. Weare (The Free Press 1998).

Another provision of the JFAA section that superficially looks like it might help an innocent person accused of a state capital offense, but which is unlikely to do so in practice, is Section 421. It authorizes $75 million per year for five years “to improve the quality of legal representation provided to indigent defendants in State capital cases. Grants shall be used to establish, implement, or improve an effective system for providing competent legal representation in capital cases, but may not be used to fund representation in specific cases. An effective system is one in which a public defender program or other entity establishes qualifications for attorneys who may be appointed to represent indigents in capital cases; establishes and maintains a roster of qualified attorneys and assigns attorneys from the roster (or provides the trial judge with a choice of attorneys from the roster); trains and monitors the performance of such attorneys; and ensures funding for the full cost of competent legal representation by the defense team and any outside experts.”

Subtitle 3—Compensation Of The Wrongfully Convicted, Section 431, “Increases the maximum amount of damages that the U.S. Court of Federal Claims may award against the United States in cases of unjust imprisonment from a flat

Justice For All Act continued on page 13
Constitutions Tossed For Talking Suggestively On Telephone

Seventeen year-old Anthony McKenzie made several collect phone calls in June and July 2003 from Georgia’s Forsyth County jail to a 14-year-old girl he met over the Internet. During the jail monitored calls the couple carried on sexually suggestive conversations.

McKenzie was then prosecuted and convicted of two counts of violating a Georgia state law (OCGA § 46-5-2(a)(1)) that criminalizes “indecent, lewd, lascivious, and filthy, as well as obscene, telephonic communication made by private individuals or commercial entities regardless of the speaker’s intent.” (McKenzie v. State, No. S05A0298 (Ga. 04/26/2005); 2005.GA.0000544 ¶ 9 <http://www.versuslaw.com>.)

On April 25, 2005 the Georgia Supreme Court tossed McKenzie’s convictions when it unanimously ruled: “Instead of applying only to obscene speech, it [the statute] applies to speech that is merely indecent. Instead of making illegal such speech only when it is directed at minors, it makes such speech illegal when heard by adults. Instead of applying only to speech not welcomed by the listener and spoken with intent to harass, it applies to speech welcomed by the listener and spoken with intent to please or amuse. Because the statute is an overbroad infringement on the First Amendment’s guarantee of freedom of speech, appellant’s convictions for violating the unconstitutional statute must be reversed.” (Id. at ¶ 11) from below-upward. Dr. Cohle was then given PX #14 (a photo of the victim lying on the floor) and asked if the path of the bullet would be consistent with that photo, if a person was standing at the victim’s feet and shooting her. He replied that it was consistent with what he previously said. He stated that there was little bleeding from this wound, which would indicate that it was one of the last or the last wound. He was told that Priscilla had last been seen alive about 7:00 p.m. and found dead at 10:00 p.m., so he determined that she was shot about 7:15 p.m. Dr. Cohle’s testimony was used to corroborate Peters’ testimony, which he added was consistent with the actual physical facts contained in Autopsy Reports (A-95-480) which state the path of direction of this bullet is slightly from above-downward and testimony and physical evidence shows Priscilla was lying on her back. Therefore, this wound could not have been inflicted as was testified to, nor could it have been one of, or the last shot fired. The autopsy reports were not offered into evidence by either my lawyer or the prosecution. Evidence shows that this wound would have been the first or one of first inflicted, before Priscilla ended up on her back.

Micoley Davis continued from page 6

Detective Renhawitz testified that he saw a bruise under one of Peters eyes and that was contrary to Peters’ testimony. Her mug was taken at the time of her arrest, showed no bruise, but the mug shot was not offered into evidence by my lawyer.

Several of Priscilla’s neighbors testified to seeing Peters in the neighborhood of Priscilla’s house, and around the house itself. Several forensic experts testified that the fingerprints and footwear impressions found at the crime scene and in the victim’s case were never match mine, nor was the murder weapon traceable to me. The fabric, tape, plastic, and steel wool samples from the crime scene did not match the items taken from my apartment or the device from my car. No physical evidence links me to Priscilla’s murder. The prosecution’s case hinged on its star witness — Peters. The judge observed, "If Ms. Peters didn’t testify against him, I wouldn’t think the prosecution would have an awful lot of case." The judge added, “the prosecution would have a real tough time convicting you without that evidence.”

Mr. Hanner, a co-worker of Priscilla’s, alleged that Priscilla told him that I had called her the morning of this homicide, and threatened to kill her. The jury ruled prior to my trial that his testimony concerning the phone call was inadmissible, but during the trial he changed his mind and decided to allow it under MRE 803(2), as an excited utterance. When my lawyer tried to elicit Hanner’s entire statement, the prosecution objected that it was hearsay. The judge ruled the jury couldn’t hear, “Ms. Peters might kill her.” because it was neither material nor relevant. However the judge did allow the statement, “Mr. Davis threatened to kill her.” After Hanner left the stand, the judge told the jury the reason he allowed this testimony was because it served to identify the perpetrator. At that point the judge effectively expressed to the jury the belief that I was the perpetrator, and the prosecution capitalized on that in his closing argument. Hanner’s handwritten statement and his police interview support that his alleged conversation with Priscilla was not an excited utterance. The statements also conflict with his testimony and indicate he told the jury his own words and not those of Priscilla. My lawyer didn’t present Hanner’s previous statements to strengthen his objection to the judge’s ruling allowing Hanner’s testimony.

I took the stand on my own behalf and testified that I did not kill my wife, nor was I involved in her murder. I was with our 4-year-old daughter when I received a page on my pager. I then made a phone call from the town of Paw Paw at 7:01 p.m. for 2 minutes to Priscilla’s house. That call was answered by the answering machine. I was not even in Berrien County that evening. The only corroborating evidence my lawyer presented was the phone bill showing the call I made from Paw Paw. Also, I had not seen Peters since about 1:00 p.m. until I picked her up at about 8:20 p.m. On rebuttal, testimony was given that it took a police officer 24 minutes to drive the 27 miles from Paw Paw to the Benton Harbor Exit 33, on I-94, traveling at 71 mph, which was still 5-6 miles, 4 stop signs, and reduced city speed limits from the crime scene. The undisclosed phone records for (616) 927-6068 would have established that Priscilla was home before 7:00 p.m., and that she paged me. That is critical because Priscilla’s Certificate of Death states her time of death was 1915 hrs. (7:15 p.m.). It is physically impossible that I, or anyone, could drive from Paw Paw to the crime scene in 12 minutes, which is half the time it took the police to just drive from Exit 60 (Paw Paw) to Exit 33.

The prosecutor misstated crucial evidence and testimony in his closing argument and presented his own version of the alleged phone conversation between my wife and I that was not in evidence or testified at trial.

My conviction was affirmed by the Michigan Court of Appeals on June 5, 1998. The Michigan Supreme Court denied an application for leave to appeal on March 30, 1999. A Motion for Relief from Judgment was denied on October 24, 2000, by my trial judge, who indicated that I failed to satisfy the “actual prejudice” and “good cause” requirements set forth in MCR 6.508(D)(3)(A). My trial judge denied a Motion for Subpoena for Phone Records stating that there was no meritorious basis for granting the motion, even though it is exculpatory evidence that would help establish my innocence. On September 30, 2002 the U.S. District Court, Eastern District denied a habeas corpus petition. On April 9, 2002 the federal Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals denied my appeal of the District Court’s decision. On August 5, 2004 the U.S. Supreme Court rejected my petition for a writ of certiorari. To date, no state or federal court has considered the importance of my claims of actual innocence.

Thank you for reading about my case and my current legal predicament. I can be contacted at: Micoley Davis 133518 Bellamy Creek Correctional Facility 1727 Bluewater Highway Ionia, MI 48846

My outside contact is: Valerie Kevan 9907 W Madero Ave. Phoenix, AZ 85037
Wrongful Conviction Compensation Governed By Mish-Mash Of State And Federal Laws

As of June 2005 eighteen states, the District of Columbia, and the federal government have statutes that provide compensation to a person who can establish that he or she was wrongly convicted.

Those statutes are summarized in the chart on page 17. No two statutes are the same. They vary as to the qualification requirement for compensation, who makes the determination of eligibility, what proof standard is applied, who makes the determination of compensation, and how much can be awarded. There are also differences in the type of conviction that is eligible for compensation, the statute of limitations for filing a claim, and whether other considerations can affect the size of the compensation award (such as legal expenses, lost income, medical expenses, etc.).

The most striking dissimilarity is in the maximum possible award. They range from Montana’siggardly award of free tuition to any school in the state’s university system - and then only to a person exonerated by DNA evidence - to the award of “fair and reasonable damages” by New York and West Virginia - with no statutory maximum. The District of Columbia also has no statutory maximum award, but punitive damages are excluded.

A legislative appropriation or a section 1983 federal civil rights lawsuit statute are the primary avenues available for a wrongly convicted person in the 32 states that don’t have a compensation statute. Although a suit can also be filed in state court, damages are typically limited by statute under the doctrine of sovereign immunity.

The problem of how effectively the wrongly convicted are compensated in the real world is how fair in actual cases. The chart on page 15 lists 74 awards of compensation in 2003 and 2004. Three people were awarded compensation by more than one jurisdiction, and the 46 Tulia, Texas defendants were awarded a lump sum that was divided by a formula that took into account their conviction and the length of their time in custody.

The chart’s most noticeable information is the discrepancy in the Average Yearly Compensation. It ranges from the $8,000 per year awarded by the State of Illinois to three defendants sentenced to life in prison, to the $1 million per year awarded a defendant sentenced to life in prison who sued the City of Chicago.

The 71 people awarded compensation were convicted in ten states, and they were awarded an average of $165,398 for each of the 434 years they were wrongly imprisoned. The average time from exoneration to a compensation award was over two years, although in one case - Albert Ramos - it was 11 years. The cases of Wilton Dedge (below), Ken Marsh (p. 16), and Michael Pardue (p. 20) are emblematic of the myriad of difficulties a wrongly convicted person can face to obtain compensation.

Wilton Dedge Sues For 22 Years Wrongful Imprisonment

by JD Staff

Wilton Dedge was released in August 2004 after 22 years imprisonment for a rape a DNA test in 2004 excluded him from committing. Dedge was convicted in 1982 and sentenced to 30 years in prison, even though six alibi witnesses swore that when the rape occurred he was at a garage 45 minutes away. After his conviction was reversed, he was again wrongly convicted after a retrial and sentenced to life in prison.

Florida doesn’t have a wrongful conviction compensation statute, so in January 2005 it was announced that several state senators would sponsor a special-claims bill awarding Dedge $4.9 million for lost wages, wrongful imprisonment and costs incurred by his family and lawyers.

In February state Rep. David Simmons filed a claims bill in the Brevard County Circuit Court that named the State of Florida and state Dept. Of Corrections Secretary James Crosby Jr. as defendants, and

Ellen Reasonover Awarded $7.5 Million Compensation For 16 Years Wrongful Imprisonment

By Hans Sherrer

The contents of the tape corroborated Reasonover’s statement to the police that she called the police to provide information and help track down the people who killed her. Although it was discoverable exculpatory evidence, her prosecutors did not turn it over to her trial and appellate lawyers.

Centurion Ministries also found evidence discrediting the two jailhouse informants the prosecution relied on to convince the jurors of Reasonover’s guilt. Although both informants claimed to have heard her confess, one was proven to have lied for the prosecution, and the truthfulness of the other was seriously cast in doubt because she only testified after Reasonover’s prosecutors bribed her with a sweetheart deal.

In reversing Reasonover’s conviction, U.S. District Judge Jean Hamilton ruled that if the jurors had heard the concealed tape recording and the evidence discrediting the prosecution’s two star jailhouse informants, there is a reasonable probability that they would have agreed with Reasonover’s claim of innocence and found her not guilty.

In 2001 Reasonover filed a multi-million dollar federal civil rights lawsuit against the city of Dellwood, lead police investigator Dan Chapman, St. Louis County, lead prosecutor Steven H. Goldman, and several other officers. In 2003, U.S. District Court Judge Carol Jackson dismissed the claims against all the defendants except the city of Dellwood and Chapman, who is now the city’s police chief. In dismissing the claims against prosecutor Goldman, who is now a St. Louis County judge, Jackson wrote, “A prosecutor is entitled to absolute immunity against allegations that he withheld or suppressed favorable evidence.”

Although they denied any wrongdoing, in September 2004 the city of Dellwood and Police Chief Chapman settled Reasonover’s claims against them for $7.5 million. James Buckley might agree that it is a fitting end to the unconscionable mistreatment by law enforcement authorities of the one person in the world who cared enough to act as a Good Samaritan by calling the police to provide a lead that might have led to the capture of his killers. To this day James Buckley’s killers have been given a free pass because the Dellwood police and the St. Louis County District Attorney’s Office took the easy way out by framing an innocent woman for the tragic snuffing out of his life at nineteen years old.

Endnotes:
1 Reasonover Gets $7.5 Million in Suit, William C. Lohrka (staff), St. Louis Post-Dispatch, September 16, 2004.
2 Sources: Reasonover Gets $7.5 Million in Suit, William C. Lohrka (staff), St. Louis Post-Dispatch, September 16, 2004.

Justice Denied: The Magazine For The Wrongly Convicted

Page 14

Issue 28 - Spring 2005
Compensation Awarded To The Wrongly Convicted In 2003 & 2004

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Compensation</th>
<th>Paid By</th>
<th>State</th>
<th>Convicted</th>
<th>Released</th>
<th>Exonerated</th>
<th>Yrs. Imprisoned</th>
<th>Avg. Yearly Compensation</th>
<th>Compensation Awarded</th>
<th>Exonerated By</th>
<th>Convicted Crime</th>
<th>Sentence</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Michael Austin</td>
<td>$1,400,000</td>
<td>State of MD</td>
<td>MD</td>
<td>1974</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>27</td>
<td>$51,852</td>
<td>2004</td>
<td>Eyewitness error and ineffective assistance of counsel</td>
<td>Murder</td>
<td>Life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marcellus Bradford</td>
<td>$120,000</td>
<td>State of IL</td>
<td>IL</td>
<td>1986</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>6</td>
<td>$20,000</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>DNA</td>
<td>Kidnapping</td>
<td>12 yrs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rolando Cruz</td>
<td>$120,300</td>
<td>State of IL</td>
<td>IL</td>
<td>1982</td>
<td>1995</td>
<td>2002</td>
<td>13</td>
<td>$9,254</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>Acquittal after retrial</td>
<td>Murder</td>
<td>Death Row</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richad Dunziger</td>
<td>$9,000,000</td>
<td>City of Austin</td>
<td>TX</td>
<td>1988</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>13</td>
<td>$692,308</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>DNA</td>
<td>Rape</td>
<td>Life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frederick “Rick” Daye</td>
<td>$389,000</td>
<td>State of CA</td>
<td>CA</td>
<td>1984</td>
<td>1994</td>
<td>1994</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>$38,900</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>DNA</td>
<td>Rape &amp; kidnapping</td>
<td>Life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anthony Faison</td>
<td>$1,650,000</td>
<td>State of NY</td>
<td>NY</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>14</td>
<td>$117,857</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>Recanting witness &amp; fingerprint exclusion</td>
<td>Murder</td>
<td>Life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bruce Godchalk</td>
<td>$2,340,000</td>
<td>State of PA</td>
<td>PA</td>
<td>1986</td>
<td>2002</td>
<td>2002</td>
<td>16</td>
<td>$146,250</td>
<td>2004</td>
<td>DNA</td>
<td>Rape</td>
<td>10-20 yrs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Michael Green</td>
<td>$1,000,000</td>
<td>State of OH</td>
<td>OH</td>
<td>1988</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>13</td>
<td>$76,923</td>
<td>2004</td>
<td>DNA</td>
<td>Rape &amp; robbery</td>
<td>20-50 yrs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Michael Green</td>
<td>$1,600,000</td>
<td>City of Cleveland</td>
<td>OH</td>
<td>1988</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>13</td>
<td>$123,077</td>
<td>2004</td>
<td>DNA</td>
<td>Rape &amp; robbery</td>
<td>20-50 yrs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vincent Jenkins</td>
<td>$2,000,000</td>
<td>State of NY</td>
<td>NY</td>
<td>1982</td>
<td>1999</td>
<td>1999</td>
<td>17</td>
<td>$117,647</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>DNA</td>
<td>Rape</td>
<td>20 to Life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Martin Lantigua</td>
<td>$300,000</td>
<td>State of NY</td>
<td>NY</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>1996</td>
<td>1996</td>
<td>6</td>
<td>$50,000</td>
<td>2004</td>
<td>Eyewitness error</td>
<td>Murder</td>
<td>Life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Martin Lantigua</td>
<td>$1,000,000</td>
<td>City of New York</td>
<td>NY</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>1996</td>
<td>1996</td>
<td>6</td>
<td>$166,667</td>
<td>2004</td>
<td>Eyewitness error</td>
<td>Murder</td>
<td>Life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Leonard McSherry</td>
<td>$481,000</td>
<td>State of CA</td>
<td>CA</td>
<td>1988</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>13</td>
<td>$37,000</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>DNA</td>
<td>Kidnapping &amp; rape</td>
<td>48 yrs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roberto Miranda</td>
<td>$5,000,000</td>
<td>Clark County</td>
<td>NV</td>
<td>1982</td>
<td>1996</td>
<td>1996</td>
<td>14</td>
<td>$357,143</td>
<td>2004</td>
<td>Ineffective assistance of counsel</td>
<td>Murder</td>
<td>Death Row</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>James Newsome</td>
<td>$15,000,000</td>
<td>City of Chicago</td>
<td>IL</td>
<td>1979</td>
<td>1994</td>
<td>1995</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>$1,000,000</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>Prosecutors concealed exculpatory evid. and false testimony</td>
<td>Murder</td>
<td>Death Row</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Christopher Ochoa</td>
<td>$5,300,000</td>
<td>City of Austin</td>
<td>TX</td>
<td>1988</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>13</td>
<td>$407,692</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>DNA</td>
<td>Rape &amp; murder</td>
<td>Life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Calvin Ollins</td>
<td>$120,000</td>
<td>State of IL</td>
<td>IL</td>
<td>1986</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>$8,000</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>DNA</td>
<td>Murder, rape, kidnapping &amp; robbery</td>
<td>Life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Calvin Ollins</td>
<td>$1,500,000</td>
<td>City of Chicago</td>
<td>IL</td>
<td>1986</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>$100,000</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>DNA</td>
<td>Murder, rape, kidnapping &amp; robbery</td>
<td>Life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Larry Ollins</td>
<td>$120,000</td>
<td>State of IL</td>
<td>IL</td>
<td>1986</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>$8,000</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>DNA</td>
<td>Murder, rape &amp; robbery</td>
<td>Life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aaron Patterson</td>
<td>$161,500</td>
<td>State of IL</td>
<td>IL</td>
<td>1986</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>17</td>
<td>$9,500</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>Pardon based on false confession extracted by police torture</td>
<td>Murder</td>
<td>Death Row</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Albert Ramos</td>
<td>$5,000,000</td>
<td>State of NY</td>
<td>NY</td>
<td>1984</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>$625,000</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>False confession extracted by police torture</td>
<td>Child abuse</td>
<td>25 yrs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ellen Reasonover</td>
<td>$7,500,000</td>
<td>City of Dellwood</td>
<td>MO</td>
<td>1983</td>
<td>1999</td>
<td>1999</td>
<td>16</td>
<td>$468,750</td>
<td>2004</td>
<td>Perjurious prosecution testimony</td>
<td>Murder</td>
<td>Life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Omar Saunders</td>
<td>$120,000</td>
<td>State of IL</td>
<td>IL</td>
<td>1986</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>$8,000</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>DNA</td>
<td>Murder, rape, kidnapping &amp; robbery</td>
<td>Life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles Shepard</td>
<td>$1,650,000</td>
<td>State of NY</td>
<td>NY</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>14</td>
<td>$117,857</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>Recanting witness &amp; fingerprint exclusion</td>
<td>Murder</td>
<td>Life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bernard Webster</td>
<td>$900,000</td>
<td>State of MD</td>
<td>MD</td>
<td>1982</td>
<td>2002</td>
<td>2002</td>
<td>20</td>
<td>$45,000</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>DNA</td>
<td>Rape</td>
<td>30 yrs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jimmy Williams</td>
<td>$750,000</td>
<td>State of OH</td>
<td>OH</td>
<td>1991</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>$75,000</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>Eyewitness recanted</td>
<td>Rape</td>
<td>Life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Totals</td>
<td>$71,782,750</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>$165,398</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

* The three defendants awarded compensation from two sources are counted only one time.

Visit Justice:Denied’s Website:
http://justicedenied.org

Visit the Innocents Database:
http://forejustice.org/search_idb.htm

Visit the Innocents Bibliography:
http://forejustice.org/biblio/bibliography.htm

Information about almost 1,700 wrongly convicted people in 26 countries is available.

Chart prepared by Hans Sherrer.
Ken Marsh $50 Mil. Claim Rejected

In 1983 Ken Marsh was convicted of murdering Phillip Buell, his girlfriend’s two-year-old son. On August 10, 2004 his conviction was vacated and he was released from prison after his petition for habeas corpus was granted without opposition from San Diego District Attorney Bonnie Dumanis. Marsh’s petition was based on the analysis of numerous medical experts that Phillip’s injuries were consistent with those that would be caused by him hitting his pubic hair and head hair, he made a match and that his finding was statistically supportable – when it wasn’t. He also testified that the washrag had only the rapist’s semen on it - which he falsely claimed was Greens’. However it was impossible for the washrag not to have also had the victim’s fluids on it – and it was later discovered it did. Thus the washrag was invaluable as evidence excluding any man whose semen was dissimilar to that on it. Furthermore, when Serowik’s lab notes were reviewed by Green’s lawyers, they discovered he knew at the time he testified that the washrag had a detectable presence of fluid from both the attacker and the victim.

In May 2003 Green filed a multi-million dollar federal civil rights lawsuit in Cleveland naming as defendants: the Cleveland Clinic Foundation and several of its officers, the city of Cleveland, and two of his former lawyers. Among the suit’s allegations were that Cleveland police investigators provided the victim with information that led her to identify Green in a lineup after she had previously failed to do so, and that the police fabricated some of the prosecution’s evidence.

On June 7, 2004, Cleveland and Michael Green agreed to settle his claims against the city for $1.6 million to be paid in ten annual installments beginning in 2004, and the city also agreed to reinvestigate all criminal cases that meet at least one of the following four criteria:

- All cases from January 1, 1987 on, in which forensic lab technician Joseph Serowik testified at trial.
- Any cases in which Serowik performed serology and/or hair analysis before the defendant pleaded guilty before trial.
- A random selection of all other files involving Serowik and serology and/or hair evidence.
- A random selection of other forensic lab employees where serology and/or hair evidence has been analyzed since 1987.

Cleveland hired attorney James Wooley to oversee the forensic audit, that it is believed will include more than 100 cases.

At the time the suit was settled, the director of Cleveland’s crime lab, Subodh Chandra, admitted about Serowik, “He’s still in the lab. He still has his job. He’s not doing serological or hair analysis any more.” However both Serowik and his supervisor were later put on unpaid leave pending completion of Wooley’s investigation.

After the settlement was announced, Michael Green commented about its unusual provision requiring an independently supervised audit of the Cleveland crime lab’s work dating back 17 years, was, “This is a chance for me to reach through the bars and help the inmates I left behind.”

Green had previously been awarded about $1 million in compensation by the state of Ohio.

Source: City to pay $1.6 million for man’s prison time, Connie Schultz (staff), Cleveland Plain Dealer, June 8, 2004.

Ken Marsh and his wife Brenda Warter. They were married after Ken’s release from prison in the fall of 2004. (NBC7 San Diego)

Roberto Miranda Receives $5 Million For Wrongly Spending 14 Years On NV’s Death Row

I n 1980 Roberto Miranda immigrated to the United States from Cuba. In 1982 he was charged with the 1981 Las Vegas murder of Manuel Rodriguez Torres. Although he only spoke Spanish, Clark County, Nevada (Las Vegas) prosecutors administered a polygraph examination in English that he had great difficulty understanding.

After performing poorly on the exam, the Clark County Public Defenders office assigned him an inexperienced lawyer a year out of law school who had never handled a capital murder case. Protesting his innocence, Roberto was convicted and sentenced to death.

After losing his direct appeal, Roberto filed a state post-conviction petition requesting a new trial. Roberto claimed he had been deprived of a constitutionally permissible level of representation by his lawyer. Among his claims was that his lawyer failed to investigate leads Roberto provided him with that would have supported his innocence and cast doubt on his guilt, as well as failing to vigorously contest the veracity of the prosecution’s physical and testimonial evidence. Roberto also alleged that his lawyer had not pursued disclosure of exculpatory evidence concealed by the prosecution.

In 1996 a state District Court judge who stated in part — “The lack of pretrial investigation and preparation by trial counsel ... cannot be justified” — ruled Miranda had been denied effective assistance of counsel, reversed his conviction, and ordered a new trial. The murder charge was dismissed after prosecutors declined to retry Miranda. He was released after spending 14 years on death row.

Represented by Spence, Shockey & McCalla (Gerry Spence’s Jackson, Wyoming law firm), in 1998 Roberto filed a federal lawsuit against Clark County, Nevada, the Clark County Public Defenders’ office, and the lawyer who represented him at trial. His basic claim was his civil rights were violated by their handling of his case. A U.S. District Court judge dismissed the lawsuit on the ground that Roberto couldn’t sue the county, the public defenders office, or the lawyer for poor representation. Roberto appealed that ruling, which was upheld by a three judge panel in the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. However sitting on banc, the Ninth Circuit partially reversed itself after granting Roberto’s motion for reconsideration. In remanding the case back to the district court for trial, the Ninth Circuit ruled that Roberto could sue Clark County and the director of the Public Defenders office who assigned the inexperienced lawyer to Roberto’s case (because he represented Clark County when he did so). However the Court ruled Miranda couldn’t sue the ineffective lawyer. Clark County appealed the ruling to the U.S. Supreme Court, which in October 2003 declined to review the decision.

Facing a possibly catastrophic jury verdict for its egregious mishandling of Roberto Miranda’s representation, Clark County agreed to a $5 million settlement that was finalized on June 22, 2004 with the dismissal of his civil suit.

Justice Denied: The Magazine for the Wrongly Convicted

PAGE 16

Issue 28 - Spring 2005

Ken Marsh $50 Mil. Claim Rejected

In 1988 Michael Green was convicted of raping a Cleveland Clinic patient. He was released in October 2001 after being excluded as the woman’s attacker by the DNA analysis of a washrag found at the crime scene that was used by the rapist to wipe himself. Green had been wrongly imprisoned for 13 years.

It was also learned during the reinvestigation of Green’s case that Cleveland police lab technician Joseph Serowik falsely testified as an expert witness about key prosecution evidence. He testified that after analyzing the victim’s and Green’s pubic hair and head hair, he made a match and that the finding was statistically supportable – when it wasn’t. He also testified that the washrag had only the rapist’s semen on it - which he falsely claimed was Greens’. However it was impossible for the washrag not to have also had the victim’s fluids on it – and it was later discovered it did. Thus the washrag was invaluable as evidence excluding any man whose semen was dissimilar to that on it. Furthermore, when Serowik’s lab notes were reviewed by Green’s lawyers, they discovered he knew at the time he testified that the washrag had a detectable presence of fluid from both the attacker and the victim.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer published a series of articles about Green’s case in 2002 titled, The Burden of Innocence. Although Green had been released the previous year, Rodney Rhines confessed to the rape a week after the articles appeared, and he is currently serving a five-year sentence.

In May 2003 Green filed a multi-million dollar federal civil rights lawsuit in Cleveland naming as defendants: the Cleveland Clinic Foundation and several of its officers, the city of Cleveland, and two of his former lawyers. Among the suit’s allegations were that Cleveland police investigators provided the victim with information that led her to identify Green in a lineup after she had previously failed to do so, and that the police fabricated some of the prosecution’s evidence.

On June 7, 2004, Cleveland and Michael Green agreed to settle his claims against the city for $1.6 million to be paid in ten annual installments beginning in 2004, and the city also agreed to reinvestigate all criminal cases that meet at least one of the following four criteria:

- All cases from January 1, 1987 on, in which forensic lab technician Joseph Serowik testified at trial.
- Any cases in which Serowik performed serology and/or hair analysis before the defendant pleaded guilty before trial.
- A random selection of all other files involving Serowik and serology and/or hair evidence.
- A random selection of other forensic lab employees where serology and/or hair evidence has been analyzed since 1987.

Cleveland hired attorney James Wooley to oversee the forensic audit, that it is believed will include more than 100 cases.

At the time the suit was settled, the director of Cleveland’s crime lab, Subodh Chandra, admitted about Serowik, “He’s still in the lab. He still has his job. He’s not doing serological or hair analysis any more.” However both Serowik and his supervisor were later put on unpaid leave pending completion of Wooley’s investigation.

After the settlement was announced, Michael Green commented about its unusual provision requiring an independently supervised audit of the Cleveland crime lab’s work dating back 17 years, was, “This is a chance for me to reach through the bars and help the inmates I left behind.”

Green had previously been awarded about $1 million in compensation by the state of Ohio.

Source: City to pay $1.6 million for man’s prison time, Connie Schultz (staff), Cleveland Plain Dealer, June 8, 2004.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>State</th>
<th>Statute</th>
<th>Year Enacted</th>
<th>Qualification Requirement</th>
<th>Conviction Restriction</th>
<th>Who Makes Determination</th>
<th>Proof Standard</th>
<th>Statute of Limitation for Claim</th>
<th>Maximum Award</th>
<th>Considerations</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Alabama</td>
<td>Code of Alabama §29-2-150 through 165</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>Conviction vacated or reversed and charges dismissed</td>
<td>Felony conviction with total incarceration of more than 2 yrs.</td>
<td>Verification by Div. of Risk Management, judgment by the Committee on Compensation for Wrongful Incarceration, and appropriation by Legislature.</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td>2 years</td>
<td>Minimum of $50,000 for each year of incarceration, but committee can recommend larger legislative award.</td>
<td>Not Specified</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>California</td>
<td>Cal Penal Code §§ 4900 to 4906</td>
<td>2000</td>
<td>Pardon based on innocence</td>
<td>Felony conviction with incarceration</td>
<td>State Board of Control makes a recommendation. to the legislature</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td>6 months after acquittal, pardon, or release and 4 months before new legislative meeting</td>
<td>$100 per day of incarceration</td>
<td>Not Specified</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dist. of Col.</td>
<td>DC Code § 2-421 - 2-425</td>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Pardon based on innocence or conviction reversed or set aside based on innocence</td>
<td>Convicted with incarceration</td>
<td>Civil court Clear and convincing Available to any person released after 1979</td>
<td>No maximum.(No punitive damages)</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Iowa</td>
<td>Iowa Code Ann § 663A.1</td>
<td>1997</td>
<td>Conviction dismissed, vacated or reversed</td>
<td>Aggravated misdeemeanor or felony conviction with incarceration</td>
<td>District Court determines liability. State Appeal Board or Civil Court determine damages</td>
<td>Clear and convincing 2 years</td>
<td>$50 per day &amp; lost wages up to $25,000/yr &amp; attorney’s fees</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Illinois</td>
<td>Ill Rev Stat Ch. 705 § 505/8</td>
<td>1945</td>
<td>Pardon based on innocence</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td>Court of Claims Preponderance of the evidence</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td>5 years</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Massachusetts</td>
<td>M.G.L. Ch. 258D</td>
<td>2004</td>
<td>Pardon based on innocence or conviction vacated or reversed, charges dismissed, or &quot;not guilty&quot; verdict after new trial</td>
<td>Felony conviction with incarceration sentences of 1 yr or greater</td>
<td>Civil Court Clear and convincing 2 years</td>
<td>Fair and reasonable damages up to $500,000 (No punitive or exemplary damages). Half-price tuition to state and community colleges.</td>
<td>Lost income</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maryland</td>
<td>MD State Fin. &amp; Proc. § 10-501</td>
<td>1963</td>
<td>Pardon based on conviction in error</td>
<td>Convicted, sentenced and confined</td>
<td>Bd of Public Works Conclusive</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td>Actual damages and reasonable amount for counseling</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maine</td>
<td>14 Me Rev Stat Ann §241-8244</td>
<td>1993</td>
<td>Pardon based on innocence</td>
<td>Incarcerated</td>
<td>Superior Court Clear and convincing 2 years</td>
<td>$300,000 maximum (No punitive or exemplary damages allowed)</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Montana</td>
<td>Mont. Code Ann. § 53-1-214</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>Exonerated by post-conviction DNA testing</td>
<td>Felony conviction with incarceration</td>
<td>Appropriated by the legislature and authorized by the Dept. Of Corrections DNA test result</td>
<td>10 years</td>
<td>Free tuition to any school in the state's university system.</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>North Carolina</td>
<td>NC Gen Stat §§ 148-82 to 148-84</td>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Pardon based on innocence</td>
<td>Felony conviction with incarceration</td>
<td>Industrial Commission, but subject to judicial review Vindicated in conviction with alleged offense</td>
<td>5 years</td>
<td>$20,000 per year with Maximum of $500,000</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>New Hampshire</td>
<td>NH Stat § 541-B:14</td>
<td>1977</td>
<td>Found innocent</td>
<td>Convicted and incarcerated</td>
<td>Board of Claims Board must find by majority vote that claim is &quot;justified&quot;</td>
<td>3 years</td>
<td>$20,000 maximum total payout</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>New Jersey</td>
<td>NJ Stat Ann §§52-4C-1 to 4C-6</td>
<td>1997</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td>Incarcerated</td>
<td>Superior Court Clear and convincing 2 years</td>
<td>2x claimant’s income in the year prior to incarceration or 20K per year of incarceration, whichever is greater.</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>New York</td>
<td>NY Ct. of Claims Act § 8-b</td>
<td>1984</td>
<td>Pardon based on innocence, or conviction reversed and charges dismissed based on innocence, or &quot;not guilty&quot; verdict after new trial.</td>
<td>Felony or misdeemeanor convictions with incarceration</td>
<td>Court of Claims Clear and convincing 2 years</td>
<td>Fair and reasonable damages with no maximum.</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ohio</td>
<td>Ohio Rev Code Ann § 2305.02 &amp; § 2743.46</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>Conviction vacated reversed and charges dismissed based on procedural error or determination the person didn’t commit the offense or it was not committed by any person.</td>
<td>Felony conviction with incarceration</td>
<td>Court of Common Pleas for liability; Court of Claims for damages Preponderance of evidence</td>
<td>2 years after finding by Court of Common Pleas</td>
<td>$40,330 per yr and lost wages, prison costs, and attorney’s fees</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oklahoma</td>
<td>51 Okl. St. § 154</td>
<td>2004</td>
<td>Pardon based on innocence, or conviction vacated and charges dismissed based on &quot;actual innocence.&quot;</td>
<td>Felony with incarceration</td>
<td>Civil Court Clear and convincing No time limit</td>
<td>$175,000 maximum total payout (No punitive or exemplary damages allowed)</td>
<td>Relevant factors including physical and mental suffering and earning loss.</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tennessee</td>
<td>Tenn Code Ann §9-8-108 (a)(7) §40-27-109</td>
<td>1984</td>
<td>Pardon based on innocence, or judicial “exoneration.”</td>
<td>Incarceration</td>
<td>Board of Claims Not specified 1 year</td>
<td>$1,800,000 maximum total payout</td>
<td>Relevant factors including physical and mental suffering and earning loss.</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Texas</td>
<td>Tex Code Ann § 103</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>Pardon based on innocence, or judicial relief on the basis of innocence.</td>
<td>Incarceration</td>
<td>Either administrative claim with comptroller or civil suit.</td>
<td>Preponderance of evidence 3 years</td>
<td>25K, per year to a max of $500,000, and one free year of counseling if mutually agreed by Dep. of Mental Health</td>
<td>Legal expenses; lost wages, and medical expenses (incl. counseling)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wisconsin</td>
<td>Wis Stat § 775.05</td>
<td>1913</td>
<td>Innocent of convicted offense</td>
<td>Convicted with incarceration</td>
<td>Claims Board Clear and convincing Not specified $5,000/y, yr $25,000 but Board may petition legislature for additional funds</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>West Virginia</td>
<td>W Va Code § 14.2-13(a)</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td>Pardon based on innocence, or conviction reversed and charges dismissed, or acquittal on retrial.</td>
<td>Arrest or conviction with incarceration</td>
<td>Court of Claims Clear and convincing 2 year</td>
<td>Fair and reasonable damages with no maximum.</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Federal</td>
<td>H.R. 5107 (108th Congress)</td>
<td>2004</td>
<td>Unjust imprisonment</td>
<td>Incarceration</td>
<td>U.S. Court of Federal Claims Not specified Not specified $50,000 per yr in non-capital cases, and $100,000 per yr in capital cases</td>
<td>Not specified</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Louisiana: Bill approved by the Louisiana House Appropriations Committee on June 1, 2005 that provides a maximum of $15,000 per year of incarceration with a maximum total payout of $150,000. The Bill must be passed by the full House and Senate and signed by the governor. Louisiana currently provides an exonerated person with $10 and a bus ticket home. * Information is believed to be accurate as of June 1, 2005. Primary Source: Criminal Justice Policy Coalition, 563 Massachusetts Avenue, Boston, MA 02118, website: http://cjpc.org
Clarence Harrison Exonerated Of Rape, Kidnapping And Robbery After 18 Years Imprisonment By JD Staff

In 1987 Clarence Harrison was convicted and sentenced to life in prison for the October 25, 1986 kidnapping, rape and robbery of a 25 year-old-woman waiting at a bus stop in Decatur, Georgia, who was also robbed of her watch and money. Clarence was 27 years old. Although she was attacked at 6a.m., before dawn, the jury relied on the woman’s identification of Clarence out of a photo lineup and her courtroom ID of him during his trial. Testing of the seminal fluid collected from the victim was only able to narrow her attacker to 88% of the male population. The police initially fingered Clarence as a suspect because he lived in the area of the attack, and he had served five years in prison after being convicted at 19 of armed robbery.

Determined to prove his innocence, Clarence at first spent all his spare time in prison diligently working on his case. As he recently said, “I worked on my case so much I got migraine headaches.” However after encountering the setbacks of having his direct appeal denied, and having a private lab determine in 1988 that the attacker’s semen sample was unsuitable for DNA testing, Clarence began to despair: “After a year or so, you get burned out and you fall off into the system and you lose faith and your hope and you begin to believe you’ll never get out. And that happened to me.”

 Denied parole, and unlikely to be granted it without accepting responsibility for a heinous crime he didn’t commit, Clarence languished in prison. A turning point came in 1997 when a young fellow prisoner talking to his girlfriend on the telephone, unexpectedly handed Clarence the phone. On the other end was the young woman’s mother, Yvonne Zellers. Yvonne offered to write Clarence, but he resisted because at that point it appeared he would die in prison. Clarence finally agreed she could write him about what she learned from the Bible, and she soon began to visit him. A year later he asked Yvonne if she would marry him if he was ever released from prison. She said yes, and Clarence had a renewed reason to fight for his exoneration.

After years of pursuing various leads, on February 10, 2003 Clarence wrote a letter to the newly formed Georgia Innocence Project (GIP) that began: “My name is Clarence Harrison. I am presently being held falsely accused of crimes I could not have committed.”

The lawyer who handled Clarence’s direct appeal in 1988 was on the GIP’s Board of Directors, and in part due to the lawyer’s knowledge of Clarence’s case and personnel belief in his innocence, the project accepted his case. The DeKalb County District Attorney’s office told the GIP that all the evidence from Clarence’s case had been destroyed. However the persistence of its student interns paid off when they found a slide of the rapist’s semen from the victim’s rape kit.

On August 24, 2004, the semen tested by a private laboratory in California, Forensic Science Associates, excluded Clarence as the women’s attacker. A week later, on August 31st, Judge Cynthia Becker granted Clarence’s motion for a new trial and then dismissed the charges. Clarence was immediately released from custody. On the DeKalb County courthouse steps, the same courthouse where almost 18 years earlier he had wrongly been found guilty and sentenced to life in prison, Clarence Harrison credited his fiancé Yvonne with giving him the renewed hope that led to his exoneration. He also said he hopes to work with the GIP to help free the many innocent men that he believes he left behind in prison. Clarence also mentioned that Yvonne and he would marry as soon as he could afford to buy a ring. Within days, strangers stepped forward and donated such things as rings, a cake, and a singer for their wedding. Several business owners also called to offer Clarence a job.

Although it is unknown how much the victim was influenced by the Decatur police and DeKalb County’s D.A. to wrongly identify Clarence as her attacker during the initial photo line-up, and then at his trial, he holds no enmity towards her. After his release he said, “I never held any anger toward her. I just thought she made a mistake.”

I’m still in a daze,” was Clarence Harrison’s response to how he felt, two days after his release from 17 years of wrongful imprisonment, as he sat in the office of the Georgia Innocence Project that had successfully worked to prove his innocence.

The case has helped Costa realize his true calling – public interest law. “It was fantastic to help free someone who is innocent. But as great as it was, the real accomplishment is doing the work that we’re doing. This just highlights how important public interest work is,” he said. Costa, president of the Emory Public Interest Committee at the law school, received the Sutherland, Asbill & Brennan grant, which paid his summer salary at GIP.

Costa worked with the DeKalb County District Attorney’s Office to allow evidence to be tested by a lab GIP considers the best, Forensic Science Associates in California. Another lab had trouble testing the evidence a few years earlier.

“Jason coordinated going to the prison to take our client’s DNA sample. He watched the Georgia Bureau of Investigation take the sample and made sure the evidence was delivered to the lab,” Maxwell said. It was the first time Costa met Harrison. Although he had communicated with him by telephone and letter.

Harrison, Costa, and Walker will continue to work for the GIP. Costa will design and help Harrison implement a plan to transition to life after exoneration, Maxwell said, including obtaining a driver’s license, getting a job, and settling into a new home.

“Historically when a person has been exonerated, the biggest challenge has been that there is not enough help for the individual to get re-acclimated to society,” Costa explained. “We get to set a new standard on what kind of impact an organization such as GIP can have in an individual’s life.”

Sources:
An Innocent Man: Clarence Harrison had nearly given up – then a phone call changed his life, David Simpson, Atlanta Journal-Constitution, September 2, 2004.

Clarence Harrison after his release

Emory Law Student Helps Free Georgia Man Imprisoned 18 Yrs

By Georgia Innocence Project

Jason Costa, 21, is still reeling from the release of Clarence Harrison, who spent almost 18 years in prison for a crime he did not commit. Harrison, 44, was freed on August 31, 2004 after DNA test results ruled him out as the perpetrator of a rape for which he was convicted in 1987.

Costa, an Emory Law School student, started an internship with the Georgia Innocence Project (GIP) in May 2004. The two-year-old organization has received more than 1,400 letters from prisoners asking for help with their cases. GIP has only opened six cases, and Harrison is the first prisoner to be exonerated through its efforts.

“It was the kind of case where we knew we could help him because we expected DNA to be available,” GIP Executive Director Aimee Maxwell said. “There is absolutely no way we would get the work done without the law students. We are a very bare-boned nonprofit, and there is no way I could devote the energy and time on the cases without Jason and others

Clarence Harrison Awarded $1 Million Compensation

In May 2005 Georgia’s governor signed legislation that will compensate Clarence Harrison $1 million for his 18 years of wrongful imprisonment for kidnapping, robbery and rape. House Resolution 108 authorized an initial lump sum payment of $100,000, and an annuity of $45,000 annually for 20 years.

HR 108 recognized that during his nearly two decades of wrongful imprisonment “Mr. Harrison was divorced by his wife and virtually prevented from seeing his two children throughout his incarceration; he missed the birth of his first grandchild; his mother and one sister died; and he suffered from medical conditions including a worsened back problem that causes him now to have to walk with a cane, migraine headaches for three years for which he received no treatment, and due to a delayed diagnosis of kidney cancer, he had to have a kidney removed.”

House Resolutions to compensate Douglas Echols and Samuel Scott who were exonerated of rape in 2002 after being wrongly imprisoned for 4 years and 15 years respectively, didn’t make it out of a House Appropriations subcommittee.

Insanity Grips The British High Court – OK Given To Charge Exonerated People ‘room and board’
by Hans Sherrter

Insanity is defined by the Random House Webster’s Unabridged Dictionary (1999 ed) as “the condition of being insane.” The same dictionary defines insane as “not of sound mind; of, pertaining to, or characteristic of a person who is mentally deranged.” July 29, 2004 marks the day members of the British High Court were griped by insanity.

Mike O’Brien was one of three defendants known in Britain as the ‘Cardiff Newsagent’, convicted in 1988 of the October 1987 robbery and murder of newsagent Phillip Saunders in Cardiff, Wales. The three were exonerated of the murder in 1999 and released after 11 years of imprisonment.

O’Brien was awarded damages of $1.17 million by the British Home Office. However the Home Office deducted $66,000 what it describes as his ‘saved living expenses’ during the time he was wrongly imprisoned.

The Home Office’s deduction was based on their formula of charging O’Brien about $6,300 annually or $525 monthly, for the ‘bed and board’ he had been provided for 11 years by the British Prison Service. The charge only covered the estimated cost of providing O’Brien with food and a cell to sleep in. The Home Office’s rationale was that the British government had to bear the cost of his upkeep during the period of his imprisonment, expenses that he would have had to personally bear if he had been free. So the deduction was imposed to prevent him from experiencing a financial windfall by saving those expenses while imprisoned. A Home Office spokesperson said of the deduction, “morally, this is reasonable and appropriate.”

The Home Office also considers the ‘bed and board’ deduction a bargain for O’Brien, since the Prison Service’s budget expense apportioned for each British prisoner is approximately £26,000 ($47,000) per year. O’Brien experience with the Home Office isn’t unique. The ‘bed and board’ deduction is levied against everyone in Britain awarded damages by the Home Office after exoneration from a wrongful conviction.

Robert Brown, e.g., was exonerated in 2002 of a 1977 murder conviction and released after 25 years of wrongful imprisonment. Imprisoned at 19 years old, and released a quarter century later at 44, he was billed about $144,000 for the living expenses he had saved during his decades of wrongful imprisonment. Brown’s reaction to the deduction was one of disbelief: “I was arrested, fitted up and held hostage for 25 years and now they are going to charge me for being kept as their prisoner against my will. Can you think of a more disgusting way to abuse someone? I really feel that my heart is truly and finally broken. I’ve tried to maintain my dignity, but the state has treated me with nothing but contempt – now they are asking me for money for my bed and board in jail.”

Paddy Hill was one of the Birmingham Six wrongly convicted in 1975 in IRA terrorists. The six innocent people were released in 1991 after 16 years of imprisonment. Hill was billed $90,000 for room and board, and the Home Office also deducted $126,000 as interest on money it advanced him pending a decision on his damage award. He was not told at the time of the “advance” that he would be charged interest – much less the usurious interest rate of 23%. Hill responded angrily to the Home Office’s conduct: “They had enough money to frame me. Nevertheless, when it comes to paying out compensation for ruining my life they happily rip me to shreds. … I’ve had to put up with this, yet there has not been one police officer convicted of fitting up people. The Home Office had no shortage of money to keep me in jail or to run a charade of a trial.” Hill continued, “While I was in prison, my family lost their home, yet they get no compensation. But the state wants its money back. It’s like being kicked in the head when someone has beat you already.”

Vincent Hickey was one of the Bridgewater Four wrongly convicted of killing a paperboy in 1979. The four were exonerated and released in 1997. Hickey was charged $108,000 for the 18 years that the Prison Service provided him three squares a day and a bed to sleep on. Hickey hadn’t lost his sense of irony after being victimized by a frame-up orchestrated by ten police officers. Hickey quipped, “If I had known this I would have stayed on hunger-strike longer, that way I would have had a smaller bill.”

The hardest public criticism of the Home Office’s policy was by John McManus, with the Scottish Miscarriage of Justice Organisation: “The government seems intent on punishing innocent people. It’s hard to believe someone actually thought this policy was a good idea. This tells the public how they think it insane. Only a sick mind could have invented this policy. … It is cruelty with intent. They seem to want to punish people for having the audacity to be innocent.”

Although everyone affected was upset by the ‘bed and board’ deduction, Mike O’Brien was the only one who chose to legally challenge the Home Office’s policy. He said, “Morally, the position of the government is just outrageous. It shows total contempt for the victims of miscarriages of justice. It makes me livid. … A government can’t get much worse than this.”

In March 2004 the British High Court (Court of Appeals) ruled in O’Brien’s favor: It was improper for the Home Office to deduct a ‘saved living expense’ charge from his damage award. However the Home Office appealed for reconsideration. In reversing its decision on July 29, 2004, the Court stated the charge was a “lawful and reasonable” deduction. The Home Office now has a green light to charge ‘room and board’ to exonerated people.

Although he has been diagnosed as suffering from “irreversible, persistent and disabling post-traumatic stress syndrome,” due to his ordeal of being wrongly convicted and imprisoned, Anthony Marino is unable to work and is unable to hold a job. In 2002 his family spent a year preparing paperwork and obtaining United States government approval for his transfer under the ICESCR to a prison medical facility in the U.S. where he could receive the care he needs.

On December 4, 2002 Costa Rica signed and adopted the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR), an Organization of American States (OAS) treaty that governs international prisoner transfers. The importance of considering a transfer for health reasons is recognized in that treaty’s Article 12 - The Right to the Highest Attainable Standard of Health. That article’s section entitled, Violations of the Obligation to Respect, specifically emphasizes the importance of a state’s legal obligation to first and foremost respect a prisoners “right to health” – which includes authorizing a prisoner’s transfer to his or her home country when that is necessary for health reasons.

Costa Rican doctors have told Anthony that his medical care needs are unavailable in Costa Rica. So beginning in 2002 his family spent a year preparing paperwork and obtaining United States government approval for his transfer under the ICESCR to a prison medical facility in the U.S. where he could receive the care he needs.

Even though the Costa Rican government is aware of Anthony’s medical needs, in August 2003 they denied his transfer to a prison medical facility in the United States. Their justification was that he owes restitution to the group of American investors who originally filed the claim of fraud against him in a Costa Rican court. These investors recently requested Anthony’s transfer to the United States so their dispute can be settled in the United States. In spite of the expressed desire of the investors and Anthony’s health needs, Costa Rica continues to deny his transfer to the United States. Anthony is indignant and cannot repay the debts Costa Rica claims he owes, so no one can benefit financially from him remaining in that countries prison system. His family continues working with the Costa Rican Ombudsman, his public defender, and human rights groups to convince Costa Rican authorities that Anthony’s health condition is precisely the type of circumstance that should trigger his transfer under the ICESCR to a U.S. medical prison facility.

Anthony Marino’s contact person is his daughter, Annmarie Roberts. Email her at: annroberts111@hotmail.com.

Anthony Marino Update

Anthony Marino is an innocent U.S. citizen who has been imprisoned in Costa Rica for six years. After three years of pre-trial custody Anthony was convicted in 2002 of allegedly defrauding several U.S. investors. He was sentenced to 18 years in prison. He vehemently denies the fraud accusation and is appealing his conviction. (See, Unjust Cruelty Hidden As Dual Criminality - The Anthony Marino Story, Justice Denied, Issue 24, Spring 2004).

Anthony is over 65 and in poor health. He has diabetes, high blood pressure with severe hypertension, and an aneurysm. Concern by Anthony’s family about his health led them to contact the Ombudsman in Costa Rica, who worked with Anthony’s family and the Costa Rican public prosecutor to successfully argue to a judge the Costa Rica’s Constitution required Anthony’s transfer to a prison facility that had some provisions for a prisoner over 65 with health problems. Consequently, Anthony was recently transferred to such a facility from the grossly overcrowded general population prison where he had been for almost six years. (Note: The Ombudsman are involved with a non-governmental human rights organization that works according to United Nations guidelines to help people who are having their human rights abused.)
Michael Pardue’s Quest For Compensation
After 28 Years of Wrongful Imprisonment

By Becky Pardue

In February 2001 the official word from The State of Alabama was, “In the Michael Pardue case, the system worked.”

If the official who made that statement had just emerged from nearly 28 years of wrongful imprisonment, perhaps he would not have been so generous with his assessment of the system’s efficiency. But, it was not he who was innocent and imprisoned in 1973 at age 17 in the harshest prison in the Deep South for something he had not done. It was not he, but a small-framed blonde boy named Michael Pardue.

Since you are reading this, chances are that you too have been touched by the criminal injustice system in America. And unless you have tremendous help, endless resources, or both, you or your loved probably remains imprisoned. But, if you are among those who have accomplished the impossible by being liberated from the iron fists of injustice, several questions remain. What do you do next? Do you walk away, simply thrilled with your success and bask in the sunlight of your newly found freedom? Do you swallow the ludicrous boasting of state officials who loudly proclaim your release is proof the system works? In our case we did not have to give it much thought. Freedom is sweet, but we could not let the responsible people and organizations get away scot-free with what they had done to Michael, and me. We fought together for 18 years to free him – and I was his wife for the last 13 years of that fight.

Now, we are fighting for compensation for all those lost years. We are also working to have the people prosecuted and imprisoned who violated the law in order to convict and imprison Michael. This time, instead of his name, the prosecutors’ names are on the “DEFENDANT” line. Kind of gives you a rush, doesn’t it? It did us too, but the rush was very short lived.

Background Information

A little background information about Michael’s case will help to understand our compensation efforts. Much of the next seven paragraphs is excerpted from Donald Connery’s Introduction to our book Freeing the Innocent - How We Did It.

At age 17, Michael Pardue was a lost soul. He was a homeless, high school dropout living on scraps. His family had been destroyed when his father killed his mother the year before and was sent to prison. Though he had a gentle nature to go with his slight physique, the boy’s occasional delinquent behavior had brought him to the attention of the police. Thus, he became a convenient suspect in the separate shotgun slayings of two filling station attendants in the Mobile, Alabama area on May 22, 1973.

In their rush to solve the highly publicized crimes that had rocked the community, the police ignored strong leads to the two actual killers. Though not a speck of valid corroborating evidence or reliable eyewitness testimony connected the teenager to the crimes; he was subjected to a four-day round the clock interrogation. Locked in a police station, deprived of any outside contact including legal counsel, food, water or access to a bathroom, he finally succumbed to the marathon of physical and psychological intimidation. Beaten, dehydrated, hungry and having soiled himself repeatedly, he finally confessed to the killings - never mind that his admissions were contrary to the forensic facts. When the cops found a decomposed body in the nearby woods, possibly but not certainly a homicide victim, he was forced into a third confession to help them close that case as well.

Mike’s quick farse of a trial lasted less than three hours. He had an attorney, only recently a prosecutor, “whose representation was worse than no representation at all” according to a court ruling decades later. Sped off to prison as a confessed and convicted triple murderer, he seemed doomed to die behind bars, perhaps sooner than later. Alabama’s lockups in the 1970s were notoriously violent and he was the youngest inmate in the worst penitentiary of all.

He survived. To ward off predators, he pretended to be a crazed and dangerous triple murderer of the headlines. In his early years as a convict he twice briefly and nonviolently escaped. Then, as if taking the advice he now gives others inmates, Michael Pardue settled down to become a model prisoner. He worked and studied. He kept to himself. He avoided trouble. As the years rolled by, he read a mountain of books. He was a quiet man in a caged world of noise and menace. Like the innocent hero of The Shawshank Redemption, he used his wits to keep himself sane and whole as he clung to a faint hope that somehow, some day; the truth would set him free.

Then, Becky entered his life on 1983. She liked his sketches he mailed for her t-shirt business in Mobile. They corresponded, met and fell in love. They had a small window of opportunity for parole. When a cruel bureaucratic decree slammed that window shut in 1987, Mike’s frustration led him to “the biggest mistake of my life” he escaped for a third time, again nonviolently by driving away from the prison ranch. That rash act earned him a draconian life-without-the-possibility-of-parole sentence under Alabama’s “three strikes” habitual offender act.

Mike and Becky were trapped in a nightmare. Short of execution, his penalty for fleeing the prisons where he did not belong was as severe as it could be. Proving his actual innocence of the original crimes would demonstrate the unfairness of it all, but that seemed a hopeless task. What they could try to do, despite their scant knowledge and meager resources, was to use the legal system to challenge the shady and illegal means employed by the state to win its prosecutions back in 1973. If they could find a path through the maze of Alabama’s lower and higher courts and finally overturn all three murder convictions, the way would be clear to challenge the die-in-prison punishment for the escapes.

Remarkably, they managed in just six years to erase all the murder convictions, one by one. But then the authorities in 1995 chose to validate the mistakes of their predecessors by going back to trial on one of the old homicides. Relying again on the bogus confession, this time misleading the jury with a long-hidden partial tape of the interrogations, the prosecutors won a new guilty verdict. He appealed. The Alabama Court of Criminal Appeals unanimously reversed his murder conviction as unconstitutional having been based entirely on a coerced confession. The state could have mustered their case and proceeded to trial again, without the false confession, but they refused. They had nothing to take to trial, they never did. In typical fashion, rather than giving Michael a new trial where a defense of innocence could be presented, the state dropped the murder charges.

In 1997, the final murder conviction was erased when the state Supreme Court agreed that the confession was coerced. Armed with nothing else, unable to build a case, the state conceded.

We promptly went about attacking the three escapees charges. In an odd twist of fate, the State of Alabama is not only judicially corrupt, it is inept as well. Michael was able to find ample constitutional flaws in the escape convictions to force reversals. It took another 4 years.

On February 15, 2001 Michael Pardue was released from prison after 27 years and 9 months of wrongful incarceration.

The following is how our efforts to obtain compensation for Michael’s ordeal is progressing.

Compensation Claim Filed

In 2001, Alabama enacted a bill to compensate (at $50,000 per year with no cap) the wrongfully incarcerated. We were taken aback by this progressive move in the Deep South. Within months of Michael’s release we began to compile our application for compensation citing this new law. We did not simply fill out papers explaining the legalities leading to the reversal of the murders. Knowing that Attorney General Bill Pryor - who vehemently fought against Michael’s release - was a member of the compensation committee, it was obvious to us that a simple application would not do. The documentation we sent was nothing less than an excruciatingly detailed case study. It included everything, every single piece of evidence existing about the murder cases, including the names of the actual perpetrators. We cataloged and cross-referenced every document with testimony, forensic work and expert analysis. We actually had the profound fortune to get Dr. Herbert McDonnell, Dr. Henry Lee’s associate to study crime scene photographs, perform blood spatter analysis and produce a comparative report between this evidence and Michael’s confession. The confession was clearly a fraud by a world renowned specialist’s analysis. We took about three months out of our life to make the most comprehensive report possible. When all was said and done our beautifully prepared case study weighed in at 25 pounds, 12 ounces according to the postal scale. It was mailed — certified and insured — on February 23, 2003.

The state had previously admitted they could not bring Michael’s case back to trial for lack of evidence. They made no secret that a new trial for Pardue without the “confession” would most certainly end with an acquittal. We erroneously took that as a concession, after all, if the prosecution does not have enough evidence to convict, isn’t that tantamount to the defendant being not guilty? Innocent until proven guilty is the most basic principle of American law. Right? So we were confident of a positive response when we submitted our compensation application.

Yet almost two and a half years later we are still awaiting a response of any kind. We have stopped calling for a progress report. There is no progress to report. Why? The compensation committee has never convened to consider our application. It is sitting collecting dust in the corner of an office in Montgomery - Alabama’s state capitol. The official word on our application is this: The Division of Risk Management must certify our application. They are unable to do so because they do not know the definition of wrongfully incarcerated. They have sent a request for a definition to Alabama’s attorney general. The attorney general fought Michael’s release and is currently defending the city, county and state officials who conspired and successfully convicted and imprisoned him. So much for Alabama’s progressive compensation legislation that looks good on paper but so far has been meaningless in practice.

Federal Civil Rights Lawsuit Filed

In 1999 we filed our Section 1983 federal civil rights lawsuit in Mobile against the conspirators directly responsible for Michael’s 28 years of unconstitutional imprisonment for crimes he did not commit. Keep in mind that it is not simply those lost years, experiences and opportunities that Michael seeks compensation. It is also what replaced those 28 years of free-world experiences; being wrongfully thrown into the bowels of Alabama’s hellish prison system for that period of time.
Michael Pardue continued from page 20

The defendants we named in our suit from Michael’s 1973 prosecution include Chandler Stanard, recent district attorney turned defense lawyer and Michael’s court-appointed defense counsel from 1973, Baldwin County Chief Detective Robert Stewart, Baldwin County Sheriff Cotton Long, Baldwin County DA James Hendrix, Mobile County Chief Detective Bill Travis, Mobile County DA Charles Graddick and DA Willis Holloway, Saraland Police Chief Frank Pridgen, Saraland Police Lt. Frank Mann, and Mobile forensic specialist Marion Sennet. The defendants from Michael’s 1995 prosecution include Baldwin County Asst. DA Judy Newcomb, Mobile County DA John Tyson, Jr., Mobile County Asst. DA Tom Harrison and Asst. DA Mike Davis, and Mobile County investigator Ed Lemler.

We cited obstruction of justice, conspiracy to obstruct justice, perjury, libel and slander, false prosecution, coercing a false confession, and suppression of exculpatory evidence. Under the U.S. Supreme Court’s decision in Heck v. Humphrey, 512 US 477 (1994), a defendant has two years from the day a case is terminated in which to file a civil rights lawsuit. The Alabama State Supreme Court ordered the reversal of Michael’s convictions in 1997 and the nolle prosequi motions were promptly filed by the district attorneys involved. So in accordance with Heck, we filed our claim in 1999 - which was two years before Michael’s release.

Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor chose to defend the defendant’s named in our suit. Again, the unlimited resources of the state were pitted against us.

Our case was originally assigned to Federal District Court Judge Richard Vollmer. In the initial hearing, he ruled that he would not hear any arguments from the defendant’s concerning the timeliness of our lawsuit, since under Heck’s guidelines we had filed timely.

We waited. Months passed with no action, then Judge Vollmer issued a 104-page ruling that gutted a large part of our case. Without an immunity hearing of any sort, he granted 11th Amendment Immunity to Mobile County DA John Tyson, Jr., Chief Asst. DA Tom Harrison and Asst. DA Michael Davis, the prosecutors in Michael’s 1995 retrial. We attempted to appeal this immunity issue to the federal 11th Circuit Court of Appeals. They refused to hear the appeal, stating that since Judge Vollmer’s Order was not final; we had to wait until it was “final” before they would review our claims. Judge Vollmer Order also removed the state law claims (the libel and slander claims against Tyson and Graddick) from our lawsuit. We then filed them in state court.

During discovery for our civil suit we found proof in the Mobile DA’s files that prosecution witnesses Willis Holloway, “Cotton” Long, and Frank Mann (all involved in Michael’s 1973 prosecution) perjured themselves during Michael’s 1995 retrial, and that the prosecutors had to have known it at the time they testified. We also learned that prior to Michael’s 1995 trial that his prosecutors had a tape of an alibi witness (who had been unknown to us) who stated that Michael Pardue was with him at the time of the 1973 murders. Yet the tape had neither been disclosed to Michael during discovery prior to his 1995 retrial, nor during the federal court ordered discovery during Michael’s 1994 federal habeas corpus proceeding that preceded his 1995 retrial. Furthermore, a series of photographs conclusively proving that Michael’s 1973 confession was false in numerous critical aspects was provided by the DA’s office during the civil suit’s discovery process. Those photos were concealed from Michael during the discovery process prior to his 1973 and 1995 trials, and his federal habeas corpus proceedings in 1994 and 1995. The State has yet to explain the concealment of those exculpatory photos from Michael and his attorneys.

While deposing DA Tyson in 2002, we confronted him with DA Harrison’s and DA Graddick’s use of perjury to win Michael’s convictions in 1995. Yet in 2005, DA Tyson has done nothing to investigate or prosecute the perjurers.

We moved the federal court to order the release of the 1995 grand jury witness list and transcript to prove our conspiracy and obstruction of justice claims in the 1995 trial. DA Tyson’s office responded that to release that information would be a violation of state law. We responded that was false. To date, there has been no further action on this motion. We know that when the record came to him that the prosecution’s alleged “eyewitness” to the 1973 murders, and who we believed was used to obtain Michael’s 1995 grand jury indictment, who did not testify at his 1995 retrial, Holloway, Long, or Mann testified before the 1995 grand jury that they all gave false testimony. Since the state had more than sufficient information to know they were lying at the time of their testimony, the witness list and transcript would prove our obstruction and conspiracy claims. Thus far the state has effectively kept these proofs out of our reach.

In the pending civil case, the defendant’s attorneys were initially Alabama Assistant AG Scott Rouse and Alabama Asst. AG Andrew Christman, both under Alabama’s AG Bill Pryor. In the second year of the case, the state advised us that they had turned our cases over to an independent attorney. Shortly after that we were advised that the independent attorney handling our cases was Andrew Christman - who had left the AG’s office for private practice. He took our case files from the AG’s office with him. Asst. AG Scott Rouse continues to attend every critical deposition and hearing.

After deposing key state witness Holloway and the others, we wrote Christian a letter citing the federal and ABA Model Code of Legal Ethics and Responsibilities advising him that it was his legal duty to remove himself from the case as he is permitting his clients to false swear to the federal court. We gave him undeniable proof of the perjury and we quoted the code advising him that he had a legal duty to step down. Christman’s response was in the form of a threatening letter advising us that our case “billing” to date totaled over $250,000.00 and he would countesuer us for this amount, but he would absorb it if we immediately dropped the cases against his clients. His arrogance is laughable. We didn’t drop the case and he didn’t countersue us.

Then, Judge Vollmer died in March 2003.

Mobile’s Chief U.S. District Court Judge Callie Granade then took over our case. Judge Granade went directly from the Mobile federal prosecutors office to being a federal district court judge. She came into power from the Alabama Republican lineage of U.S. Senators Richard Shelby and Jeff Sessions, and Alabama A.G. Bill Pryor, who resigned to accept a judgeship on the Federal 11th Circuit Court of Appeals. In June 2005 the U.S. Senate formally confirmed Pryor as a federal appeals court judge. This conservative contingent also includes Randy Butler, the current Senior US Federal District Judge for the Southern District of Alabama. Butler was the Mobile County DA in 1973 when Michael was wrongfully prosecuted by Asst. DA’s Holloway Graddick. It is noteworthy that Graddick is the author of the revised Alabama Penal Code and a vocal proponent of the death penalty in Alabama. Graddick was known as “electric chair Charlie” when he was Attorney General. As attorney for the Southern Christian Coalition in which he said it was his “Christian duty to keep Michael Pardue in prison...” We can also anticipate that under those circumstances Pryor will be recused, and that the 11th Circuit will then rule in our favor that we filed our suit timely under the Heck standard. Our case will then be sent back to Judge Granade for action. We can anticipate this because - as we have seen so many times before - local court refuse to accept liability for doing what is right when it crosses one of their own. So it is left for a higher court to order them to do what they knew they should have done initially. This predictable pattern gives lower level judges the denial of responsibility for calling their cohorts on their illegal actions. What we don’t know is how long our motion for reconsideration will sit on Judge Granade’s desk before she acts.

We’re Pitted Against A System That Is Self-Protecting

As you can see, the people responsible for wrongly imprisoning Michael in 1973, and keeping him imprisoned for four years after his last murder charge was dropped in 1997, continue to infiltrate every level of the state and federal judiciary from which we are compelled to seek justice – all the way up to the Federal 11th Circuit Court of Appeals, only one step below the U.S. Supreme Court. Our case seems effectively and hopelessly thwarted by the defendants and their cronies who are now in positions to cover and protect their own, which they are doing very effectively.

That is the ultimate Catch 22 — the legal system that erroneously pronounced Michael guilty of crimes he didn’t commit is the same system he must rely on to award him compensation for the personal destruction he experienced because of that system’s errors. If you have a bad feeling in the pit of your stomach about this situation it is completely justified. It is a long and rough road. But it must be traveled. Those who manipulate and corrupt the system for their personal gain must be called to task. Their names must appear on the defendant’s line. Put them on the witness stand to try to defend what they’ve done. Put their names on the front pages across this country. It must be done and it is up to you and me.

Today, like over 20 years ago when we set out to free Michael from three murder convictions, we know that although the politicians and judges who control and manipulate the law for their personal gain are corrupt, those laws contain a depth of integrity that we must believe will prevail in the end.

Although our drawn out bid for compensation has thus far gone on for six years, we remain positive that sooner or later we will win ... again ... just as we did when Michael was released from prison on February 15, 2001.
Iva Toguri Is Innocent!

Iva Toguri was not ‘Tokyo Rose’ and she was wrongly convicted of treason

By Hans Sherrr

One of the twentieth-century’s most publicized criminal prosecutions was the 1949 trial of an innocent woman for treasonous conduct during WWII radio broadcasts from Japan. That woman was publicly described as ‘Tokyo Rose.’ By deliberately presenting perjured testimony, concealing exonerating documents and openly lying in court, her prosecutors succeeded in publicly transforming a woman who should have been hailed as a national heroine, into a convicted felon and a figure of public scorn.

Although her trial was over five decades ago, Iva Toguri’s story remains compelling because she is still alive, and it remains relevant because the tactics of deception used by her prosecutors to pervert the fair functioning of the judicial system to make an innocent woman appear guilty are regularly used in state and federal criminal trials across the country.

After arriving in Japan, Iva was totally a fish out of water. She could neither read nor write Japanese, and she was so out of touch with the culture that she didn’t even know how to use chopsticks.

In September 1943, the Japanese conscripted an American radio personality Major Charles Hughes Cousens to start the Zero Hour program on Radio Tokyo. Broadcast in English from 6pm to 7:15pm every day but Sunday, the Japanese intended it as a propaganda tool to undermine the morale of allied troops in the Pacific. However, Major Cousens planned to subvert the Zero Hour by using the program as a way to boost allied troop morale under the noses of the Japanese.

Iva gained the trust of the Zero Hour broadcast crew by smuggling food and medicine to them and other POWs. She was also the only Japanese-American working at Radio Tokyo who had not renounced her U.S. citizenship. Several months after the Zero Hour went on the air Cousins’ Japanese bosses told him to add a woman broadcaster. Suspecting all the English speaking women at Radio Tokyo were Kempeitai spies except for Iva, Cousins suggested Iva for the job and his Japanese superior agreed. Iva reluctantly joined the Zero Hour crew after Cousens assured her she would only have to read scripts prepared by him and she would not have to say anything against American servicemen. Working for 150 yen a month (about $7), Iva’s first broadcast was in November 1943.

Iva Toguri continued on page 23

The Zero Hour

When she first started broadcasting Iva used the radio name of “Ann,” and it was later expanded to “Orphan Ann.” That name was appropriate given her situation in Japan and that she grew up a fan of “Little Orphan Annie.” Cousens was able to make the Zero Hour into a news and entertainment program that reduced the Japanese’s desired propaganda into being harmless rhetoric and spirit lifting music. The four members of the Zero Hour audaciously used the Japanese’s flagship radio station to wage war on them from behind enemy lines. If the Japanese had known what the four were doing, they all could have been shot.

Iva Toguri continued on page 23
Iva Toguri continued from page 22

flyers are coming over to bomb the 43rd group when you are all asleep. So listen while you are still alive.” 22

In describing the warnings he credited Iva with broadcasting on her program, that same serviceman wrote: “Almost without fail, the Jap bombers would come over. She was a better air raid system than our own.” 22 Other pilots acknowledged the help they thought she provided by letting them know Tokyo’s weather conditions. 22

As the war dragged on, the Zero Hour underwent many changes. In June 1944 Cousens had a heart attack, Ince was fired from the program for insubordination, and Reyes was looked upon as a “friendly alien” after Japan annexed The Philippines.

Iva had continued working at Domei after she started at Radio Tokyo, but she was fired from that job in the summer of 1944 for her openly pro-American views. When she found a replacement job at the Danish legation she attempted to resign from the Zero Hour, but her Japanese bosses refused to let her go.

After Cousens left the Zero Hour, Iva began writing her own scripts, modeling them after those he had written for her. In April 1945 Iva married Felipe d’Aquino, and she began to only sporadically show up to do her radio shift. The women that filled in for Iva during her frequent absences read the propaganda laden scripts written by Japanese personnel at Radio Tokyo.

In May 1945 the Kempetai visited Iva and ordered her back to Radio Tokyo. She regularly hosted the “Orphan Ann” program from then until Japan’s surrender three months later in August 1945. During her 21 months on the Zero Hour, Iva broadcast a total of 340 programs. 22

Iva had every reason to expect she would be able to return to the U.S. soon after the war ended. After all, she was an American citizen refused passage to the U.S. before the war began; her requests to be interned with other trapped foreign nationals was rebuffed by Japanese authorities; and although kept under scrutiny by the Kempetai she carried on a one woman war effort behind enemy lines by scavenging food and medicine for allied POWs, and doing everything possible to ensure her “Orphan Ann” radio program always boosted the spirits of allied servicemen and provided warnings whenever possible.

Who Is ‘Tokyo Rose’?

Servicemen throughout the Pacific had adopted the moniker of Tokyo Rose to describe English speaking women broadcasting on Japanese radio stations. There were more than a dozen on Radio Tokyo alone. When the war ended, hundreds of reporters descended on Tokyo, and dozens combed the city trying to get the scoop on the greatest mystery and one of the hottest stories in postwar Japan: Who is the Tokyo Rose?

Two of the reporters wanting to get the Tokyo Rose scoop were Cosmopolitan Magazine’s Harry Brundidge and Clark Lee of International News Service.

In post-war Japan the average income was the equivalent of about $80 per year, so the $250 reward Brundidge offered for information leading to Tokyo Rose was a veritable fortune. Brundidge also offered $2,000 – 25 years of income at the time – for an exclusive interview with ‘Tokyo Rose’. To collect the $250 reward, a Japanese worker at Radio Tokyo identified Iva as the infamous ‘Tokyo Rose’. 22 To avoid being out-scooped, Clark Lee promptly reported to the world that the 29-year-old Iva was “Tokyo Rose”.

Iva was desperately in need of money and she knew that since there was no actual ‘Tokyo Rose’ she could claim to be her as legitimately as any other woman broadcaster at Radio Tokyo. In exchange for Brundidge’s agreement to pay her $2,000, Iva gave an interview that Lee recorded in 17 pages of notes. 22 Included in the notes of the interview was her statement she was “the one and original ‘Tokyo Rose’.” 22

However, Cosmopolitan rejected Brundidge’s article and refused to pay the $2,000 he had contracted to pay Iva without their authorization. So Brundidge was personally on the hook to pay her the money, which he didn’t want to do. His contract with Iva had an exclusivity clause, and to void it he enlisted the aid of 8th Army Counter Intelligence Circus (CIC) Commanding General Elliott Thorpe to arrange a press conference at the Yokohama Bund Hotel that was attended by over 100 reporters. 22 He also gave Lee’s interview notes to General Thorpe, telling him, “She’s a traitor and here’s her confession.” 22

After a month Iva was transferred to Sugamo Prison in Tokyo. For the next 1 1/2 months she was caged in a 6’ x 9’ cell, permitted only one visit every three days, and allowed to have a single 20 minute visit with her husband, Felipe, on the first day of each month. 22 Iva had no privacy, and once several visiting members of Congress voyeuristically peered in on her as she was bathing. While at Sugamo Iva learned that her mother had died enroute to the internment camp in Arizona, and that after being released when the war ended, her family had relocated to Chicago. 22

During the time Iva was at Sugamo Prison, Charles Cousens, the Australian Major who had recruited her to work on the Zero Hour, was tried for treason by the Australian Army for his work on that program. 22 After his acquittal he returned to his prewar job of working for Radio Syndey.

Also while she was at Sugamo Prison, Army Captain Wallace Ince was not only cleared after a U.S. military investigation of having acted treasonously by working on the Zero Hour, but he was promoted to Major. 22

Iva continued languishing in Sugamo Prison being relentlessly interrogated by the FBI and the Army CIC, even though all evidence pointed to neither her nor anyone else being Tokyo Rose. 22 It was simply a catchy name used by U.S. servicemen to describe English speaking women on Japanese radio broadcasts, and it didn’t refer to any one of them in particular. Neither was any evidence found of her having done anything treasonous during her 21 months on the Zero Hour.

When Iva’s trial began on July 5, 1949 she had already spent 11 months in custody since her arrest in Japan. She was denied bail, and after her arrival in the U.S. one irregularity was the FBI took her out of the San Francisco Jail where she had been waiting to receive a visa to return to the U.S. and into the Sacramento County Jail where she was being held and attempted to interrogate her without her lawyer being present. He learned about it and was able to intervene and stop the illegal interrogation. 22 When the defense uncovered evidence the government relied on the perjured testimony of a grand jury witness to obtain Iva’s indictment, U.S. District Court Judge Michael Roche ruled it was harmless error because the witness wasn’t a trial witness. 22 Judge Roche also barred the jury - all white and chosen in two hours - from being exposed to any evidence about Iva’s efforts on behalf of allied POWs, ruling it was irrelevant to the treason charges. 22

Fifty six witnesses testified for the government, including sixteen brought from Japan. 22 Two of the witnesses brought from Japan, Kenkichi Oki and George Mitusito, were California born Japanese-Americans who were superiors of Iva’s at Radio Tokyo. 22 The men, who had renounced their U.S. citizenship during the war, testified that Iva made a treasonous statement during a broadcast after the U.S. Naval victory at the Philippines Leyte Gulf in October 1944. 22

When it became known in the U.S. that her return was imminent, a number of people expressed opposition, but none more vocally than Walter Winchell. From his bully pulpit as the most powerful newspaper columnist and radio commentator of his time, Winchell didn’t just call for Iva to be kept out of the country, he demanded that she be prosecuted for treason. Joining in the chorus of “let’s get Iva,” J. Edgar Hoover requested the help of anyone who could assist the FBI in proving she was ‘Tokyo Rose.’ 22

Then working for the Nashville Tennessean, Harry Brundidge answered Hoover’s request for assistance. In March 1948 he went to Tokyo to assist the FBI and the Justice Department build a case against Iva by inducing her to sign Clark Lee’s notes of the interview she gave in 1945 as authentic. 22 She had never been told Brundidge was the “rat” behind her arrest in October 1945, and he feigned being her friend. 22 He assured Iva that if she signed the notes it would speed up her return to the U.S.

She resisted signing them, telling him, “Most of this is made up,” including that she was ‘Tokyo Rose’. 22 Brundidge knew what was in the notes was largely a figment of her imagination, and that the FBI told Lee and him what they wanted to hear in exchange for the desperately needed $2,000 – which she was never paid. Brundidge persisted and perhaps due to the emotional strain of having had her baby die the day after it was born two months previously, combined with wanting to be reunited with her family after a seven year separation, combined with her then 2-1/2 year effort to return to the U.S. after the end of the war, Iva caved in and signed the notes.

Two months after returning to the U.S., Brundidge openly betrayed Iva to further his career by publishing a 10 part series portraying Iva as ‘Tokyo Rose’ and a traitor. The first part was titled: Arrest of ‘Tokyo Rose’ News: She Signs Confession to “Sell-Out.” 22 His betrayal of Iva didn’t stop at publicly smearing her with what he knew were lies.

For the second time Harry Brundidge was the key figure in a catastrophe in Iva’s life when five months after he badgered her into signing Lee’s notes, the Justice Department used them to indict her for treasonous conduct. 22 In August 1948 she was arrested by military police at her apartment in Japan. She was finally granted her wish to return to the U.S. on September 25, 1948. However it was under a military escort, and when Iva arrived in San Francisco she was arrested by the FBI as an accused enemy of the United States. 22

The Trial – Part II

When Iva’s trial began on July 5, 1949 she had already spent 11 months in custody since her arrest in Japan. She was denied bail, and after her arrival in the U.S. one irregularity was the FBI took her out of the San Francisco Jail where she was being held and attempted to interrogate her without her lawyer being present. He learned about it and was able to intervene and stop the illegal interrogation. 22 When the defense uncovered evidence the government relied on the perjured testimony of a grand jury witness to obtain Iva’s indictment, U.S. District Court Judge Michael Roche ruled it was harmless error because the witness wasn’t a trial witness. 22 Judge Roche also barred the jury - all white and chosen in two hours - from being exposed to any evidence about Iva’s efforts on behalf of allied POWs, ruling it was irrelevant to the treason charges. 22
Iva Toguri continued from page 23

Unlike the free spending of multiple federal agencies focused on convicting her, Iva’s meager defense was paid by her father with borrowed money. Her three lawyers, headed by Wayne Mortimer Collins, donated their months of time to defend her. It helped that Charles Cousens paid his own expenses to travel from Australia to San Francisco to testify for Iva. Wallace Ince also paid his own travel expenses to testify for her. The third male member of the Zero Hour broadcasting team, Norman Reyes, also refused to testify. Although he did so that he recanted earlier testimony as a prosecution witness, stating it had been coerced from him by federal prosecutors. A total of twenty-six witnesses testified during Iva’s defense.

By the time Iva testified for eight days on her own behalf in September 1949, she had been jailed for 13 months. Looking back at her

The government’s case against Iva revolved around convincing the jurors that Iva had encouraged American servicemen to stop fighting, that she choose to stay in Japan after the war, that she “maliciously betrayed the United States,” and that she “chose to stay in Japan after the war.” Although the jury didn’t know it, Iva could not have been ‘Tokyo Rose’ because on December 11, 1941 an entry was made in a U.S. submarine’s log book describing an English speaking woman on a Japanese radio broadcast as ‘Tokyo Rose.’ That was nine days after Iva had been refused passage back to the U.S. after the attack on Pearl Harbor, and 23 months before Iva began broadcasting the Orphan Ann program on Radio Tokyo. A month later, in January 1942, another U.S. submarine (the Seawolf) made an entry in its log book referring to a different English speaking Japanese broadcaster as ‘Tokyo Rose.’

Even with the withholding of evidence from the jury favorable to Iva, few witnesses to the trial expected Iva to be convicted of any of the eight counts. Nine out of ten reporters informally polled thought she would be acquitted. After the jury had failed to reach a verdict after days of deliberating, Judge Roche refused to declare a mistrial. To help break the deadlocked jury, he gave an “Allen” instruction to the jury that the trial had cost the government over half a million dollars, and that they should continue deliberating until they arrived at a verdict. Finally, on September 29th after 80 hours of deliberations they acquitted Iva of seven treason counts, and found her guilty of one:

“That on a day during October, 1944, the exact date being to the Grand Jurors unknown, said defendant at Tokyo, Japan, in a broadcasting studio of the Broadcast Corporation of Japan, did speak into a microphone concerning the loss of ships.”

That the jury submitted to the judge’s pressure to come to a verdict by settling on finding Iva guilty of that count was particularly odd considering its vagueness. It didn’t specify the day or time the alleged broadcast took place, or whether it referred to the loss of Japanese or U.S. ships, or both.

Imprisonment and Return To Regular Life

Iva lost her appeal, and the U.S. Supreme Court twice declined to review her conviction. She was a model prisoner at the Federal Reformatory for Women in Alderson, West Virginia. Her husband Felipe was a Filipino, and the federal government barred him from entering the U.S. to visit her, so they were only able to correspond by letters.

On January 28, 1956, Iva was released from prison on parole. However her ordeal wasn’t over. Although she had been born in the U.S., and she had attended and graduated from UCLA as a native Californian, an agent of the U.S. Immigration Service served a warrant for her deportation as she left the prison. After veterans and other groups and people publicly expressed opposition to Iva’s deportation, the government backed off from actively pursuing execution of the warrant. In 1958 the Immigration Service announced it was ceasing efforts to deport Iva.

Iva’s parole ended on April 18, 1959. Although she was stigmatized by being a felon convicted of treason, her more than 18 year odyssey to return to her family and freely resume her life in the U.S. - that began with the refusal to let her board the U.S. bound ship on December 2, 1941 - was finally over. She had spent a total of 8-1/2 years in jails and prisons, and more than 3 years on parole. She was imprisoned for a year by the military from October 1945 to October 1946; she was jailed for 1 year and 2 months from her arrest in August 1948 through her sentencing in October 1949; and she was imprisoned for 6 years and 4 months from October 1949 to January 28, 1956. Her $10,000 fine was paid out of her father’s estate when he died in 1972.

Proof Is Discovered The Federal Government Concealed Iva’s Innocence

Iva made two applications for a Presidential pardon that were ignored: one was submitted to President Eisenhower in 1954 while she was still imprisoned, and the other was to President Johnson in 1968. At that time Iva simply didn’t have the hard evidence to support a pardon. That changed in 1976, when two independent efforts converged to provide the documentary and testimonial proof that Iva was not only innocent, but the federal prosecutors misled the jury, her lawyers and the world at large by concealing proof of her innocence and suborning witnesses to perjure themselves in court and prisons, and more than four years prior to the start of her trial. In the early 1970s Ron Yates, a Chicago Tribune reporter, took an interest in Iva’s case after receiving a letter from a reader. In 1976 while the Tribune’s correspondent in Tokyo, Yates tracked down the two men, Kenkichi Oki and George Mitsuhiko, who had provided the critical testimony about the lone count of treason Iva had been convicted of. During a meeting at a Tokyo restaurant, both men admitted to Yates that Iva did not make the treasonous broadcast they testified to at her trial, and that they perjured themselves under pressure by the federal prosecutors.

Complementing Yates’ findings were the discoveries of a San Francisco filmmaker, Antonio Montanari, Jr. He accidentally stumbled across Iva’s case in 1972 while researching U.S. Army Intelligence’s belief during WW II that Amelia Earhart was ‘Tokyo Rose.’ His curiosity piqued by Iva’s conviction in spite of a lack of evidence against her, Montanari submitted requests under the newly enacted Freedom of Information Act of 1974 with the Justice Department asking what Iva had done to prove her innocence and obtainment for documents about her case. Two years later he obtained over 2,300 documents from those agencies.

By the fall of 1976 it had been learned that before the war ended, and more than four years prior to the start of her trial, the U.S. Office of War Information determined, “There is no Tokyo Rose; the name is strictly a G-I invention. … Government monitors listening in twenty-four hours a day have never heard the words Tokyo Rose over a Japanese-controlled Far Eastern radio.” Already knowing she was not Tokyo Rose, “Six months after Iva’s arrest, the Eight Army’s legal section reported, “There is no evidence that [Iva Toguri d’Aquino] ever broadcast greetings to units by names or location, or predicted military movements or attacks indicating access to secret military information and plans, etc., as the Tokyo Rose of rumor and legend is reported to have done.”

The office of the U.S. Attorney General was aware of this report, and it was their recognition that “the identification of Toguri as ‘Tokyo Rose’ is erroneous,” that led to her rapid release from custody on October 25, 1946. Yet less than two years later, United States Attorney General Tom Clark authorized Iva’s indictment for treason by federal prosecutors who knew she was not Tokyo Rose and that she had never committed treason. Federal prosecutors and other government agents continued the charade by concealing their knowledge of her innocence all through her trial, her appeals process, and while the Immigration Service attempted to deport her after she had finished her prison sentence.

Iva’s Pardon

In November 1976 Wayne Merrill Collins, the son of Iva’s trial lawyer filed a presidential pardon petition for Iva. The public disclosures supporting her innocence were so convincing by that time, that on January 19, 1977, in one of his last acts prior to leaving office, President Ford agreed with the recommendation of U.S. Attorney General Edward Levi, and pardoned Iva. She is the only person convicted of treason in this country that has been pardoned.

Newspaper story about President Ford’s pardon of Iva on January 19, 1977.

However, Iva has not been compensated for her wrongful conviction and imprisonment, the $10,000 fine taken from her father’s estate has not been repaid, and neither her contributions to helping allied POWs in Japan during the war nor the risks she took by using her Zero Hour radio program to bolster allied troop morale have been officially recognized. Yet she did those things and took those personal risks while high military “leaders” spent the war in relative safety piling up undeserved medals, promotions and notoriety.

Aftermath

There is no shortage of villains who had roles in Iva Toguri d’Aquino’s 18 year ordeal from December 2, 1941 when U.S. officials refused to let her board a California bound ship, to April 18, 1959 when her parole ended.

- There are the nameless and faceless State Department bureaucrats who issued the Certificate of Identification

Iva Toguri continued on page 25
Iva Toguri continued from page 24
she used to travel to Japan in July 1941 but which was interrupted when she was caught in an U.S. and trapped her there during and after the war.

- There is the Radio Tokyo employee that identified Iva to Harry Brundidge and Clark Lee as ‘Tokyo Rose’ for the $250 reward - knowing she wasn’t.
- There is Harry Brundidge for his three unconscionable betrayals of Iva. The first he led to her arrest on October 17, 1945 for what was subsequently found to be the baseless accusation she was ‘Tokyo Rose,’ the second was his smear of her as the traitorous ‘Tokyo Rose’ in his 10-part newspaper series in 1948, and the third led to her equally baseless prosecution and wrongful conviction of treason. Amazingly Brundidge continued slandering Iva while she was in prison. The January 1954 issue of The Mercury featured an article by him, America’s First Woman Traitor. It is a mystery why Harry Brundidge, who died in 1960, had such a venomous hatred of Iva.
- There is Army General Elliott Thorpe for allowing the U.S. Army to be used to get Harry Brundidge off the hook to pay Iva $2,000 for the interview she gave Clark Lee and him, and then having her arrested and imprisoned without charges for more than a year beginning on October 17, 1945.
- There is federal Judge Michael Roche for his blatant pro-prosecution bias during Iva’s trial that was essential for the jury to wrongfully convict her. 24
- There are the Department of Justice attorneys who staged the elaborate charade of Iva’s prosecution knowing all the while she was innocent, and who stood silently by as she was wrongfully convicted, sentenced and hauled away to prison for over 6 years. The lead federal prosecutor in Iva’s case displayed the same cowardice it took for him to participate in the framing of an innocent Iva when he committed suicide by shooting himself at age 56 – two months after Iva’s parole was denied in April 1949. 25
- There are the federal agents in the Immigration Service who sought to deport her after her release from prison – even though she is a native born American.
- There are the hundreds of military personnel, employees of the FBI, the U.S. Attorney’s Office, and other federal agencies who although knowing Iva was innocent, remained silent and failed to come to her aid. To their everlasting shame and infamy, they remain silent to this day.

There are also many people who noticeably went out of their way to help and support Iva, including her husband Felipe d’Aquino, Norman Cousins, Wallace Ince, Wayne Mortimer Collins and his son Wayne Merrill Collins, her father and other family members. 26 However, they were powerless to stop the government’s fevered juggernaut to have Iva falsely convicted, and then having her arrested and imprisoned without a trial’s for one significant problem within 90 days of its purchase. So if the report’s estimate of wrongful convictions is to be believed, convictions of some prisoners are being handled by judges and prosecutors responsible for a correct conviction rate of 99.8%, on how to manufacture a more reliable product. Consequently the report’s suspect finding plays directly into the hands of prosecutors, judges, police and correction officials who contend the legal system works remarkably well at weeding out the innocent from the guilty.

However that assessment stands in stark contrast with the much different conclusion that can be drawn from the estimates of wrongful convictions from 1964 to 1999, the lowest of which extrapolates to an average of over 19,000 wrongly convicted people during each of the 15 years covered by the report. The highest estimate extrapolates to an average of over 133,000 wrongful convictions yearly.

Solid support for the pervasiveness of wrongful convictions indicated by the educated estimates from 1964 to 1999 is provided by the findings of a study published in June 2000. That study - A Broken System: Error Rates in Capital Cases – found that 68% of the 4,578 capital cases finalized from 1973 to 1995 was reversed on appeal; that 7% of capital cases nationwide are reversed because the condemned person was found to be innocent; and that on retrial, the defendant was given a lesser sentence in 82% of those reversed cases. So based on the findings of that extensive multi-year study that was overseen by the esteemed Professor James Lieberman (co-author of Federal Habeas Corpus Practice and Procedure), if every one of the 14,295,000 criminal conviction in this country from 1989 through 2003 had been subjected to the same degree of appellate review as is a capital case, then 9,720,600 of those cases (68%) would have been reversed, with the result that 680,442 of the defendants (7%) would have been exonerated, and 11,721,900 of the defendants (82%) would have been re-sentenced to a lesser punishment.

Consequently, the findings reported in A Broken System (and its follow-up report, A Broken System, Part II, Feb. 2002) are consistent with the estimates from 1964 to 1999. As a result there are serious systemic errors in the ability of this country’s legal system to accurately distinguish the innocent from the guilty.

So while the analysis of various factors related to wrongful convictions in the University of Michigan report is valuable information, its attempt to downplay the incidence of the phenomena must be taken with a grain of salt.

Iva Toguri d’Aquino — the innocent heroine who stood her ground while being shamelessly, dishonestly and outrageously treated for years by military investigators, FBI agents, federal prosecutors, a federal judge, immigration authorities and unscrupulous reporters — is 89 years old and lives in Chicago.

Iva Toguri d’Aquino’s 89th birthday was on July 4, 2005. Wishes of good will to her can be sent to Iva Toguri d’Aquino’s 89th birthday was on July 4, 2005. Wishes of good will to her can be sent to

Justice Denied - Iva, PO Box 68911, Seattle, WA 98168.

Notes:

1. Photo of Iva Toguri’s taken on September 4, 1945 after a press conference at the Yokohama Bund Hotel. Published in Pacific Stars and Stripes magazine.
3. Id. at 22, 28.
4. The ability of Iva’s conviction of that count is described later in this article, in The Trial – Part II. 112. Id. at 28.
5. Approximately 10,000 U.S. born Japanese-Americans were likewise trapped by relocation in Japan. See e.g., They Call Her Tokyo Rose, Keishi O’Brien, January 20, 1998, Radio Tokyo was officially known as NHK - Nippon Hoso Kyokai.
6. With the support of the Special Security Police (Tokko Keisatsu), a group created to suppress the Tafta Mura, was a Japanese vessel forced to turn back in mid-ocean and return to Japan. 113. http://www.cnn.com/2003/POLITICS/07/04/nichimotsu.d. 114. They Call Her Tokyo Rose, supra.
7. They Call Her Tokyo Rose, supra.
8. Radio Tokyo was officially known as NHK - Nippon Hoso Kyokai.
9. They Called Her Traitor, supra, at 22, 25.
10. Id. at 22, 23. This was broadcast on February 22, 1944.
11. Id. at 22, 26.
12. Id. at 22, 26.

AndInfo/exonerations-in-us.pdf

Justice Denied: The Magazine for the Wrongly Convicted

Page 25

ISSUE 28 - SPRING 2005

Iva Toguri - Endnotes continued on page 26

http://www.law.umich.edu/newsandinfo/exonerations-in-us.pdf

Justice Denied - Iva, PO Box 68911, Seattle, WA 98168.

Endnotes:

1. Photo of Iva Toguri’s taken on September 4, 1945 after a press conference at the Yokohama Bund Hotel. Published in Pacific Stars and Stripes magazine.
3. Id. at 22, 28.
4. The ability of Iva’s conviction of that count is described later in this article, in The Trial – Part II. 112. Id. at 28.
5. Approximately 10,000 U.S. born Japanese-Americans were likewise trapped by relocation in Japan. See e.g., They Call Her Tokyo Rose, Keishi O’Brien, January 20, 1998, Radio Tokyo was officially known as NHK - Nippon Hoso Kyokai.
6. With the support of the Special Security Police (Tokko Keisatsu), a group created to suppress the Tafta Mura, was a Japanese vessel forced to turn back in mid-ocean and return to Japan. 113. http://www.cnn.com/2003/POLITICS/07/04/nichimotsu.d. 114. They Call Her Tokyo Rose, supra.
7. They Call Her Tokyo Rose, supra.
8. Radio Tokyo was officially known as NHK - Nippon Hoso Kyokai.
9. They Called Her Traitor, supra, at 22, 25.
10. Id. at 22, 23. This was broadcast on February 22, 1944.
11. Id. at 22, 26.
12. Id. at 22, 26.
Justice Denied does not and cannot protect the identity of any of its contributors. Every effort is made to protect anonymous contributors from contact by the public. All information submitted to Justice Denied is subject to the discretion of Justice Denied's editors and is confidential. However, your account may be edited for length, clarity, and/or legal protection before publication. Please note that articles that are not accepted for publication will not be returned.

You must include a mailing address. If you do not, your account will not be considered. Your account must be typed, well-written, and include all necessary information regarding your story. The editor reserves the right to edit any submitted account and the editor reserves the right to edit any submitted account and to try and locate the “missing” surveillance tape. If you think you can help me, I can be written at, Jimm Parzuze #$$$$$$ Any Prison Anytown, Anystate

My sister Emily is my outside contact. Email her at, Aaaa@bbbb.com

You can also read an issue of the magazine for examples of how actual case accounts have been written. A sample copy is available for $3. Write: Justice Denied, PO Box 68911, Seattle, WA 98168. Justice Denied reserves the right to edit a submitted account for any reason. Most commonly those reasons are repetition, objectionable language, extraneous information, poor sentence structure, misspellings, etc. The author grants Justice Denied the right to publish the story in the magazine, and to publish it on Justice Denied’s website in perpetuity.

5. All accounts submitted to Justice Denied must pass a review process. Your account will only be accepted if Justice Denied’s reviewers are convinced you make a credible case for being innocent. Accounts are published at Justice Denied’s discretion. If your account is published in Justice Denied, you can hope it attracts the attention of the media, activists, and/or legal aid that can help you win exoneration.

6. Mail your account to: Justice Denied, PO Box 68911, Seattle, WA 98168. Or email it to: jdstory@justice denied.org

Justice Denied is committed to exposing the injustice of wrongful convictions, and JD’s staff stands with you if you are innocent, or if you are the Champion of an innocent person.

Justice Denied Disclaimer

Justice Denied provides a forum for people who can make a credible claim of innocence, but who are not yet exonerated, to publicize their plight. Justice Denied strives to provide sufficient information so that the reader can make a general assessment about a person’s claim of innocence. However, unless specifically stated, Justice Denied does not take a position concerning a person’s claim of innocence.

Freeing The Innocent

A Handbook for the Wrongfully Convicted
By Michael and Becky Pardue

Self-help manual jam packed with hands-on - ‘You Too Can Do It’ - advice explaining how Michael Pardue was freed in 2001 after 28 years of wrongful imprisonment. Soft-cover. Send $15 (check, money order, or stamps) to: Justice Denied - FTTI, PO Box 68911, Seattle, WA 98168. (See Order Form on p. 27)
Justice Denied can provide bulk mail quantities of the current issue (or an available back issue) that can be:

- Distributed at seminars, meetings, or conferences.
- Distributed to be sold by bookstores and newsstands in your city, and you keep the profits! (Newstands typically split magazine revenue either 50-50 or 60/40 (you) - 40% (them). JD’s nominal cover price is $3, but you can charge what the market will bear.

Use your imagination!

The cost? Very Reasonable! (includes shipping)

- 5 issues $9 ($1.80 each)
- 10 issues $15 ($1.50 each)
- 20 issues $25 ($1.25 each)
- 50 issues $50 ($1.00 each)
- 51-100 issues $90 each (e.g., 70 issues x 90c = $63)
- Over 100 issues 85c each

Send check or money order & specify which issue you want to:

Justice Denied - Bulk Issues

PO Box 68911, Seattle, WA 98168

Or, use your Credit Card to order Bulk Issues or Back Issues on JD’s website, http://justicedenied.org

---

Iva Toguri - Endnotes continued from p. 25

14 Id.
15 It is a hypothesis, however, that as the conflict between the Japanese and American governments escalated, the Japanese military may have been tracking the radio program and attempting to identify its source. For further discussion of radio programs in Japanese-occupied territories during the Occupation and their impact on local populations, see, 49-50 Tokyo Rose: Famous Cases, supra.
16 Tokyo Rose: Famous Cases, supra.
17 They Called Her Traitor, at 22, 26. 38 They Called Her Traitor, 26th ed. (emphasis added)
18 Orphan Ann Home Page, Section II.
19 http://www.dyarstraights.com/orphan_ann/orphan_index.html
20 Id.
21 Id.
22 Id.
23 Id.
24 Orphan Ann Home Page, Section III, supra.
25 Orphan Ann Home Page, Section III, supra.
26 Orphan Ann Home Page, Section III, supra.
27 Orphan Ann Home Page, Section IV, supra.
28 Id.
29 Id.
30 Id.
31 Id.
32 Id.
33 Id.
34 Id.
35 Id.
36 Orphan Ann Home Page, Section IV, supra.
37 Id.
38 Id.
39 Id.
40 Id.
41 Id.
42 Id.
43 Iva Toguri: Famous Cases, supra.
44 Orphan Ann Home Page, Section IV, supra.
45 Id.
46 They Called Her Traitor, supra, at 22, 28.
47 They Called Her Traitor, supra, at 22, 28. The second volume of the Your Name in History series, published in 1948, is Tokyo Rose: Famous Cases. It was written by Dr. Martin T. B. H. Rice and was a 50-page book that contained a biographical sketch of Iva Toguri, an introduction by Dr. Rice, and a foreword by Dr. John E. Finley, the U.S. Army POW who interviewed Iva Toguri in Japan. Iva Toguri was not fully aware of her role as Tokyo Rose until after the war, when she was interrogated by U.S. military authorities. She was subsequently tried and convicted of spying for Japan and sentenced to 10 years in prison. She remained in prison until 1949, when she was released.
48 They Called Her Traitor, supra, at 22, 28.
49 Orphan Ann Home Page, Section 17, supra.
50 Tokyo Rose: Famous Cases, supra.
51 They Called Her Traitor, supra, at 22, 28.
52 Id.
53 They Called Her Tokyo Rose, supra, at 22, 26.
54 They Called Her Tokyo Rose, supra, at 22, 28.
55 They Called Her Tokyo Rose, supra, at 22, 26.
56 Tokyo Rose: Famous Cases, supra.
57 Id.
58 The person who identified Iva as Tokyo Rose worked with her at Radio Tokyo.
59 They Called Her Tokyo Rose, supra, at 22, 26.
60 They Called Her Tokyo Rose, supra, at 22, 26.
61 They Called Her Tokyo Rose, supra, at 22, 26.
62 Id.
63 They Called Her Tokyo Rose, supra, at 22, 26.
64 Orphan Ann Home Page, Section IV, supra.
65 Id.
66 They Called Her Tokyo Rose, supra, at 22, 26. (emphasis added)
67 They Called Her Tokyo Rose, supra, at 22, 26.
68 The prosecutors relied on Judge Roche's favorable rulings to secure Iva's conviction.
69 The extensive footnotes are omitted in the text. For a full list of footnotes, see the notes section at the end of the article.

You can use a credit card to sign-up to be mailed Justice Denied, you can read back issues, change your mailing address, and more

---

Prison Legal News is a monthly newsletter providing info, analysis and alternatives for the imprisoned & interested outsiders. Free to prisoners and family. Individuals $12/yr, Org. $25/yr. Write: CPR, Box 1911, Santa Fe, NM 87504

---

Justice Denied is a monthly magazine reporting on prisoner rights and prison conditions of confinement issues. Send $2 for sample issue or $37 for info packet. Write: PLN, 2400 NW 80th St. #148, Seattle, WA 98117

---

Criminal Justice Services for all NY inmates

Parole Specialists! Send SASE

Prisoner Assistance Center, Box 68911, Albany, NY 12208.

Lots of info on the web at: http://prisoneraid.org

---

Notice

Due to a lack of space in this issue, Part 5 of the serialization of The Complicity of Judges in the Generation of Wrongful Convictions will appear in the next issue of Justice Denied. This article was published in the Fall of 2003 by the Northern Kentucky Law Review. It is the first extended critique published in this country of the critical role played by judges in causing wrongful conviction at the trial level, and then sustaining them on appeal. The extensive footnotes are omitted in Justice Denied’s serialization. To order the complete 27,000 word article, send $15 (check or m/o) with a request for - Vol. 30, No. 4 Symposium Issue to: Northern Kentucky Law Review, Salmon P. Chase College of Law; Nunn Hall - Room 402; Highland Heights, KY 40199.

---

Freeing The Innocent

A Handbook for the Wrongfully Convicted

By Michael and Becky Purde

Self-help manual jam packed with hands-on - ‘You Too Can Do It’ - advice explaining how Michael Purde was freed in 2001 after 28 years of wrongful imprisonment. See review, JD, Issue 26, p. 7. Order with a credit card from Justice Denied’s website, http://justicedenied.org, or send $15 (check, money order, or stamps) for each soft-cover copy to: Justice Denied - FT1 PO Box 68911 Seattle, WA 98168

Mail to: Name: ___________

ID No. ___________

Suite/Cell ___________

Agency/Inst ___________

Address: ___________

City: ___________

State/Zip ___________

Freeing The Innocent - ___ copies at $15 = ___________

Prisoners - 6 issues of JD ($10) = ___________

Non-prisoner - 6 issues of JD ($20) = ___________

Sample JD Issue ($3) = ___________

Total Amt. Enclosed: ___________

---

The CiteBook does the work for you. Literally millions of case “cites” have been sifted through to select the ones which are positive in nature, i.e., “cases that give you a right, not take one away. They are then listed in alphabetical categories for easy inclusion into your legal brief. The CiteBook gives you the tools necessary to achieve your legal goals.”

---

LEGAL NOTICE

THE FOUNDATION FOR INNOCENCE

IS ACCEPTING CRIMINAL CASES FOR REVIEW

- Are you innocent of the crime for which you were convicted?
- Were you rendered ineffective assistance of counsel that resulted in being convicted?

If you answer YES to either of those questions, send a SASE for a case assessment form.

The Foundation For Innocence

Executive Center

1088 Bishop Street, Ste 903

Honolulu, HI 96813

Email: innocenceweihai2002@yahoo.com
In this issue of Justice: Denied is the true story of Iva Toguri — an American who was wrongly accused of being the mythical ‘Tokyo Rose’ and wrongly convicted of treason in 1949 for allegedly making an announcement on Radio Tokyo in 1944 that could have harmed U.S. troop morale. She was wrongly imprisoned for a total of 8-1/2 years.

In 1989 former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark wrote: “The proceedings against Iva Toguri, in addition to reflecting racist and wartime hatred ... thoroughly trashed the Constitution of the United States. ... A deadly myth survives in the hearts of many ... perpetuating the myth that Iva Toguri is ‘Tokyo Rose,’ and that during World War II she was a traitor to the American people.”

In his column of April 14, 2005, Bill O’Reilly devoted six paragraphs to perpetrating the tabloid-like myths about Iva Toguri. Other media personalities are contributing to keeping the ‘Tokyo Rose’ folklore alive by describing people who disagree with the Bush administration’s foreign policies as being treasonous like ‘Tokyo Rose.’ O’Reilly’s column was printed in The King County Journal, a suburban Seattle, Washington newspaper. To counteract the disinformation that pervaded O’Reilly’s column, Justice: Denied’s publisher Hans Sherrer wrote the following Letter to the Editor that was published in the KCJ on May 2, 2005:

Woman Not A Traitor

Bill O’Reilly devoted six paragraphs in a recent column to perpetuating the myth that Iva Toguri is ‘Tokyo Rose,’ and that during World War II she was a traitor to the American people.

After World War II the FBI and Army conducted intensive investigations that determined there was no such person as ‘Tokyo Rose’, and Toguri hadn’t committed treason after being trapped in Japan caring for an ill aunt when the war began.

Influential broadcaster and columnist Walter Winchell inflamed passion nationwide against Iva when her return to the United States was imminent. In 1949 she was convicted of treason for allegedly announcing on Radio Tokyo that ships were lost during a 1944 battle at Leyte Gulf. However, no military personnel heard Toguri’s alleged broadcast. The government’s only evidence was the testimony of two Japanese-Americans at Radio Tokyo who had renounced their U.S. citizenship.

In the mid-1970s a filmmaker used the Freedom of Information Act to obtain exculpatory documents that Toguri’s prosecutors didn’t disclose to her lawyers. The Chicago Tribune’s reporter in Tokyo then tracked down the two witnesses. Both men confessed they fabricated their testimony after being threatened with prosecution if they didn’t testify against Toguri.

Toguri submitted an application for a presidential pardon based on the documentary and testimonial proof of her innocence. In January 1977 President Ford granted Iva a full and unconditional pardon.

The truth is Iva Toguri — 88 years old and living in Chicago — is an American heroine.

Hans Sherrer, Publisher, Justice: Denied magazine, Seattle,

Freeing The Innocent

A Handbook for the Wrongfully Convicted

By Michael and Becky Pardue

Self-help manual jam packed with hands-on - ‘You Too Can Do It’ - advice explaining how Michael Pardue was freed in 2001 after 28 years of wrongful imprisonment.

$15, softcover, order info on page 27

The greatest crime of all in a civilized society is an unjust conviction. It is truly a scandal which reflects unfavorably on all participants in the criminal justice system.

New York Judge John Collins

(In 1992 when he vacated Albert Ramos’ rape conviction after eight years of wrongful imprisonment.)